The ninth juror was not long in coming.

HUGE STILL RAIDED; SIX ARE ARRESTED

Six men, including four from Boston, Revere and Cambridge, were arrested today, as sixteen police raiders, with drawn revolvers, stormed into a barn on Pleasant street, Ashland, and surprised them, it is charged, in the act of operating a 1,500-gallon still.

More than 1,000 gallons of moonshine and denatured alcohol were seized and the men were taken to Framingham police headquarters by Chief of Police Holbrook for arraignment in court on charges of manufacturing and disposing of illicit liquor.

The raid was the culmination of a

He Wouldn't "Sell Them" Life Is Movement Fireworks and Red Vests Wet-Dry Fight in N. Y.

By Arthur Brisbane

Copyright, 1926, by the Star Company

A WELL INFORMED stock exchange person remarked yesterday: "I wouldn't be short of them, with counterfeit money."

By "them" he meant stocks and other pieces of paper representing American values.

We are having queer weather, but the sun is shining in the fields of prosperity. Beware how you sell short in the United States. Rather prepare for such a boom this Fall as will make other booms seem feeble.

THE SUREST SIGN of life is MOVEMENT, and the American people certainly do move. Sales of gasoline and lubricating oil are up, in many cases, forty to seventy per cent., compared with May, 1925.

Akron reports sales of automobile tires up twenty per cent.

The only menace to the automobile industry—it isn't much of a menace—is greater efficiency in manufacturing. The life of the average automobile now is eight years, three years longer than ten years ago.

THERE IS AN automobile for every six people in the United States, about half as many as there ought to be. Before long, in hundreds of thousands of families, there will be a separate car for each person past sixteen years of age. Each bird needs its own wings.

2 MEN IN 4-STORY LIFE SLIDE AT BANGOR FIRE

Bangor, Me., June 8.—Two men slid for life down ladders and several sleepers were rescued early today in a fire that destroyed the Aroostook Hotel.

Trapped on the fourth floor, Joseph Willett and Paul Grongin, realizing that they would be burned to death because no rescuer could climb through the curtain of fire licking the outside of the building, grasped the sides of a ladder and slid, bare-handed, through the flames to the street.

Both suffered bad burns from the flames and their hands were frictionburned almost to the bone in the four-story descent.

Flames from the roaring fourstory Aroostook House ignited the Waverley House on the rear and the building was damaged extensively. A few sleepers were carried out of the Waverley also.

The fire is declared to have started in the restaurant kitchen of the Aroostook House on the ground floor. The loss is set at $35,000.

BONES IN SUDBURY FIRE RUIN POINT TO TRAGEDY

Bones found in the fire ruins of the Old Burns place, an historic landmark in North Sudbury, which was destroyed today, are believed to reveal the fate of Isaac Pickanen, an aged Quincy man, occupant of the place during the Summer.

Pickanen was seen going toward the farm a few hours before the fire was discovered and in a search of the ruins Chief of Police Hall of Sudbury found what appeared to be human bones near the embers of a cot.

Medical Examiner Norman Hunter of Marlboro was summoned to make an investigation while the authorities made a search for Pickanen's wife, three daughters and two sons all said to live in Quincy.

A horse was saved from the barn but the house was a roaring furnace when the fire was discovered by Walter Ashman, owner of a neighboring farm. The property loss was estimated at $5,000.

According to residents in the vicinity, Pickanen has been living alone at the place for three weeks.

DUCHESS WARNED OF KIDNAPING

DUCHESS OF YORK

Third in line for British crown. She receives letter threatening to kidnap her and her baby when she goes to Sandwich. King George received a similar letter.

KIDNAP THREAT CALLED HOAX

London, June 8 (I.N.S.)—Scotland Yard today began an investigation of a report printed in the Daily Mirror that a threat has been made to kidnap the Duchess of York.

According to the report a letter was received at Bruton street, residence of the Duchess, stating that the writer would spirit the Duchess away when she, the Duke and their baby paid a visit to Lady Astor at Sandwich Bay.

The letter, which is unsigned, is not taken seriously, the opinion prevailing that it was written by a madman. It is understood a letter in a similar handwriting was received recently at Buckingham Palace.

RAILROAD FLEECED IN DARING SCHEME BARED BY 'FISH CARGO' PROBE

An alleged scheme conducted on gigantic proportions over a period of five years, during which it is charged that the New Haven Railroad was defrauded of thousands of dollars, was revealed today.

A Boston fish concern and a forwarding agent are said to be involved in the scheme in accordance with which, it is alleged, fish was shipped under a false classification for the purpose of securing a lower freight rate.

Thousands of carloads of fresh fish, averaging from 24,000 to 40,000 pounds each, were shipped and profited on under this illegal scheme, according to reports.

The investigation resulted from the desire of railroad officials and others to solve the mystery of the appearance on distant markets of fresh fish that was shipped from Boston under the classification of "bait fish."

The difference in the freight rate between fresh fish and bait fish, bound westward from Boston, is 20 cents per 100 pounds, and it was this difference that the alleged operators

SMITH OF BOSTON TO QUIT LEAGUE JOB

Geneva, June 8 (A.P.).—Jeremiah Smith, Jr., of Boston, League of Nations commissioner for the financial reconstruction of Hungary, probably will be relieved of his post at his own request.

Mr. Smith feels that the situation in that country has been so improved that the work can be turned over to another, possibly to his assistant, Royal Tyler, also of Boston.

The financial situation in Hungary came up today before the financial committee of the League when Premier Briand of France expressed opposition to any complete liberation at present of Hungary from control by the League committee. The premier felt that Hungary should not be free of financial oversight until something tangible has been accomplished to prevent counterfeiting scandals such as the recent manufacture of French bank notes.

EARLY RISERS IN HUB SEE 'MYSTERY LIGHT'

A thousand eyes were fixed in the east early today, when there appeared just over the buildings one of the strangest yet most fascinating blazes of light that has been seen along the New England skyline for some time.

Milkmen, choremen and newspapermen gazed at the spectacle for nearly an hour. Suggestions as to what the thing might be were offered by everyone.

Scientists at Harvard had been watching the strange object since it first poked through a section of the heavy clouds; official time, 3.97 a. m.

When it began to look as though the best informants would fail, fate took another turn in affairs. Dame Nature herself offered a solution of the mystery.

It was the sun.

YALE INSTRUCTOR HELD AFTER DODGING SHOTS

New Haven, Ct., June 8 (I.N.S.)—Karl H. Kostenbader, about to receive a graduate degree from Yale, thought two plain clothes policemen were hold-up men when they approached him beer and fled. The police chased him, firing their revolvers in the air, for several blocks until the youth ran into the arms of another policeman, who jumped on him from a doorway.

Kostenbader was locked up most of the night after his escapade and today in City Court had his case continued for further investigation. Meanwhile he refused to tell court officials what he was doing in a yard where the police first found him.

Pending his graduation late this month, Kostenbader has been an assistant instructor in the graduate school, where he has worked for his degree.

Another effort to prevent a popular referendum on Sunday baseball at the coming State election in November was launched today by opponents of the measure, who filed a petition in the Supreme Court to prevent the vote.

McNair of Cambridge, Seth Sears of Cambridge, Alvin J. Shartle of Boston, Franklin P. Shumway of Melrose and Stanley B. Vendersoll of Boston.

ATTORNEYS SPEED UP PICKING JURY IN COMEAU DEATH TRIAL

5 WOMEN ADMITTED TO COURT

time, in being accepted, although there was a long bridge in the number of veniremen examined.

CHOSEN QUICKLY.

While the eighth juror, accepted just before adjournment yesterday, was the 113th man examined, the ninth juror, Eugene Wallet, buffer, of No. 2 Brookside avenue, was the 179th man examined.

The tenth juror accepted, and the 175th man examined, was James C. Maxwell, salesman, of No. 89 Peterboro street, then, close behind came the eleventh juror, [illegible] Wahlen, real estate, of No. 46 Dix street, Revere, 183rd man questioned.

Then there came a long tedium, during which fifty talesmen were questioned and excused, questioned and excused, while the twelfth seat remained vacant in the jury box.

It seemed to spectators and court officials alike that there had occurred a sudden aversion to the death penalty in the minds of the remaining members of the venire.

WAS COMEAU FRIEND.

George J. Rommel, salesman, of No. 28 Granville street, was excused, because he said he had known Policeman Comeau very well and that any opinion he might have was biased.

For an almost similar reason, but on the defense side, Kenneth E. Cook, photo retoucher, of No. 185 Sycamore street, was excused. He said his opinion was colored through his acquaintance with a girl friend of Samborsky's sister and his discussion of the case with her.

During the process of picking the jurors, the three young defendants, just as dapper-clad as yesterday, sat in the prisoners' cage and watched the proceedings carefully.

MOTHER IN COURT.

They had the last word in accepting or rejecting a juryman and every once in a while, one or the other of the trio would whisper in consultation with his lawyer—discussing a talesman.

Directly behind the cage, in as close a position as she could get, was the mother of young Toothaker, seeking apparently to give him comfort and solace through her very nearness.

At the end of the same bench sat Mrs. Samborsky and her comely daughter Elsa, not neither glances in the direction of Mrs. Toothaker. These women, with two other feminine spectators, were the only women in the courtroom.

The jurors chosen are:

BENJAMIN BRAGMAN, tailor, 66 Essex street, Chelsea, 24th man called.

JOHN T. GRIFFIN, truckman, 27 Ellery street, East Boston, 29th called.

ARTHUR W. SOURSE, printer, 46 Amherst street, 35th called.

HERMAN S. WHITE, salesman, 29 Elmhurst street, 39th called.

JOHN N. O'NEIL, mill man, 109 Bartlett street, 93d called.

CHARLES R. FINLEY, clerk, 16 Albert street, 107th called.

CLEMENT PAYNE, insurance agent, 18 Cushing avenue, 112th called.

JAMES P. McGRATH, paperer, 21 Irving street, 113th called.

EUGENE WAHLEN, buffer, 2 Brookside avenue, 179th called.

JAMES C. MAXWELL, salesman, 89 Peterboro street, 175th called.

PAUL C. WALLACE, real estate, 46 Dix street, Revere, 183rd called.

ORA M. HEALSON, blacksmith, 22 Derne street, 241st called.

ILLNESS HALTS JUDGE'S TRIAL

Woodsville, N. H., June 8.—The sudden illness of Jaroe Henry Lavoie of Haverhill during taking of testimony today briefly halted the trial of Judge Fred A. Jones of Lebanon, charged with second degree manslaughter in connection with the death of Mrs. Mildred Presley.

Mrs. Presley, one of three guests of Judge Jones, was killed in what the prosecution alleges to have been a "joy ride" on the night of last January 20.

Professor H. J. Lockwood, professor of engineering at Dartmouth College, was testifying to the safety he made of the death scene when a juryman interrupted the cross-examination to warn that his fellow-juror, Lavoie, appeared on the verge of fainting.

Attorney Jesse M. Barton, senior defence counsel, immediately halted his cross-examination of the professor and Judge Burnue ordered a recess. Juror Lavoie was assisted to the retiring room, where he recovered in ten minutes. The trial was then resumed.

'BUNK OF 1926' CLOSED BY ORDERS OF CENSORS

New York, June 8 (A.P.).—Ramsay Wallace, producer of "The Bunk of 1926," was in arms today against the closing of his show by a jury of citizens selected by the district attorney's office.

It was the first such verdict since the jury system was evolved five years ago.

Three other shows and a three-minute skit was ordered eliminated from "The Great Temptations," produced by the Shuberts, who said the expurgation was effected last night. "Sex" and "The Shanghai Gesture" were found inoffensive.

District Attorney Benton.

OTHER SHOWS.

Juries have been assigned to visit three or four other plays. District Attorney Joab H. Banton said last night, but he declined to name the shows.

The Broadhurst Theatre was reported sold out last night, but "The Bunk of 1926" was not shown and money was refunded to all callers at the box office. The producers, Ramsay Wallace and Frank Martin, told the cast the show would open tonight, and that it was closed last night only because the verdict had been received too late to fight back.

Mr. Wallace said he would ask an injunction today against enforcement of the order and if that failed he would be modified to meet the approval of the play jury, Mr. Martins admitted that the show featured nudity, but claimed that the young women of the cast displayed themselves in such a manner that it could only be called art.

CALLED "ARTISTIC."

"The great artist Linnenkamp called it artistic," he said. "He selected one of our girls as the most beautiful girl in the world."

Miss Beryl Halley, a dancer in "Bunk of 1926," was arrested recently for appearing in a Garden of Eden scene in the production, but the case was dismissed. The show was in its seventh week.

After weeks of searching the centre of operations was discovered early today and an hour later State police and Framingham officers combined in the raid, Lieutenant Williams leading the constabulary officers.

The men arrested are Rosso del Brosso of Broadway, Revere; Ralph del Brosso of the same address; Jerry Promando of Clark street, Boston; Patsy Rose of Brennan street, Cambridge; William J. Fandi and Urdipani Gaspauner of Woonsocket, R. I.

When the discovery of the manufacturing plant was made and flashed to the State police barracks in Framingham, officers there dispatched eight men to the scene on motorcycles, while a request was sent to Chief Holbrook for eight more men, who were taken to the place in automobiles.

No time was spent picking up Ashland town constables. Both raiding parties arrived at the same time and swooped down on the barn, surrounding the arrested men before a getaway could be attempted.

YEAR OF TRAILING ENDS IN TRAP

Wealthy Providence Man to Institute Action for Divorce

Kenneth C. Grimsdale, millionaire woolen manufacturer of Pascoag and Providence, R. I., has announced he intends to file a divorce suit against Mrs. Emma Grimsdale, Providence social leader.

A raid on an Allston apartment last week, in which Mrs. Grimsdale and Carl H. Gleason, Boston and Watertown life insurance man, were arrested, with subsequent court arraignment, is to form the basis of the complaint.

Court proceedings were kept secret, but Gleason was fined $25 by Judge Connolly in Brighton District Court on Friday, and the case against Mrs. Grimsdale was filed.

BRIGHTON RAID.

The raid was made on Gleason's apartment, a one-room suite and kitchenette at No. 1134 Commonwealth avenue, by Brighton police, investigators of a local detective agency, and Mr. Grimsdale.

The arrest of Mrs. Grimsdale, according to what the manufacturer told Brighton police, followed a year of surveillance by Providence detectives and of periodical separations and reconciliations.

Last Thursday, detectives who followed her to Boston heard Mrs. Grimsdale telephone to Gleason, it is alleged. She was followed to his apartment and a woman recently obtained admission as a guest. Mr. Grimsdale was then notified and came to Boston, appealing to Brighton police on his arrival. Patrolmen Cripps and Maguire of the vice squad went to the apartment.

Gleason, it is alleged, was lured to the door with a request to accept a telegram. When he appeared Grimsdale and the detectives stepped into the room.

NEITHER SPEAK.

Neither Grimsdale nor his wife spoke. Gleason and Mrs. Grimsdale were taken to Brighton police station. Neither made any comment. At the station Grimsdale requested the affair be kept secret because of the children.

Grimsdale is an official and part owner of the Royal Worsted Mills at Pascoag, R. I. The couple recently have been living in East Greenwich.

Gleason is the son of Walter Gleason of Watertown, wealthy dealer in real estate and mortgages. Grimsdale and Mrs. Grimsdale have conferred at the office of Grimsdale's attorneys. It was after this conference announcement of the divorce proceedings to be begun was made by Grimsdale.

THREATENS TO FILL HER WITH LEAD

Winchester Girl Is Called "Dearie" as Crook Puts Gun in Her Face

Driving the maid, Miss Anna O'Connor, ahead of him with a revolver, a lone holdup man, six feet tall, robbed the house at No. 25 Foxcroft road, Winchester, of $50 in small jewelry, it was reported by the Winchester police today.

The house is occupied by Mrs. Roberta M. White, but the maid was alone when the doorbell rang.

Answering the summons, she was confronted by the tall stranger who thrust a gun into her face and said:

"If you open your face, dearie, I'll drill you full of lead."

Ordering the maid to walk ahead of him, the burglar then toured the rooms of the house.

When he had completed his work the holdup man again admonished the maid not to make outcry, and then he vanished.

CUP MYSTERY IS UNSOLVED

Beacon Hill's tempest over a 200-year-old teacup, stretching from the top of the hill to the bottom and involving Mrs. William Lowell Putnam, of No. 49 Beacon st., and the year-old Freddie Elliott, of No. 57 Brimmer st., will continue to simmer until the fall in the opinion of Richard H. Summers, china repairer, of No. 33 Charles st.

It was Mr. Summers who turned over the teacup to Freddie Elliott to deliver to the Putnam home. Yesterday both Mr. Summers and Freddie were certain that the teacup had been delivered at the Putnam home. Mrs. Putnam was equally certain that it hadn't. And there the matter stands.

Confident that young Elliott is honest in the matter, Mr. Summers admitted yesterday that there was a possibility of his errand boy having delivered the teacup at the wrong address. He said that he had made every possible effort to check up the parcels delivered by the boy on the day the teacup was given him to deliver. Many of the people, he said, were away from home for the Summer and that it was impossible for him to see them until the Fall. The possibility of a careless maid dropping the two century old teacup, originally the property of Mrs. Putnam's great-great grandmother, and then afraid to tell her mistress also enters into the controversy, according to Mr. Summers. It had been done before on Beacon Hill, he claims, and might have been done in this instance. However, he is still sticking by Freddie, with the latter claiming the cup was delivered, and, incidentally, that is all that Freddie is interested in.

MEET TO BAN OIL ON WATER

Washington, June 8 (A.P.).—Delegates from twelve maritime nations, assembled by invitation of President Coolidge, to work out international agreements against oil pollution of navigable waters, were welcomed today at their initial conference by Under Secretary Grow of the State Department.

"Your presences here," Mr. Grow said, "evidences the interest of the governments you represent in preventing pollution of navigable waters by oil discharged from vessels.

"The resulting evils are widespread and serious. Beaches and harbors are polluted; healthful water and shore recreation is diminished; fire hazard is increased, and fishing and wild life injured or even threatened with destruction.

"An adequate solution must be not only national but international in scope."

New Curfew Law Turns Broadway Into 'Main St.'

New York, June 8 (A.P.).—Broadway was almost as deserted as Main street in a small town in the small hours today, due to curfew law that went into effect at 2 o'clock.

Two night clubs defied the police orders, and one of them was raided. Three men were arrested in a place on West 48th street.

Another club that of Texas Guinan on West 54th street, was not molested.

Police Commissioner McLaughlin said the clubs were closed because many of them are run by "criminals," who prey on "honest people" in the early morning hours.

SPELL OF FAIR WEATHER DUE

For the first time this month the weather map today was free of storm signals, and with the temperature here at 70 above just before noon everything pointed, in the opinion of the official forecaster, to an indefinite spell of fair, seasonable weather.

The weatherman, however, hastened to warn New England that although the mercury in the past twelve hours climbed 14 to 20 degrees, there is no real warm weather in the offing.

The temperatures throughout this section early today ranged from 58 in Northern New England to 62 above on the shores of Long Island Sound.

H. Thomas and Ramsay MacDonald, as well as Albert Purcell."

Richmond, Va., June 8 (A.P.).—Roy Hinton Matthews, nineteen, and his bride, seventy-two, have ended their honeymoon here and returned to Newport News.

The bride told with pride of their happiness thus far. Both balked when approached by a photographer, but the bridegroom yielded when he saw it would please the bride.

Mrs. Matthews declared it was a case of "love at first sight, I guess, and he wouldn't let me wait another day."

"We are supremely happy," she added.

They met for the first time during a funeral at a boarding house at which Mrs. Matthews lived. He called on her the next day and soon afterwards asked her to marry him.

"He wouldn't even let me wait a year after my last husband's death," Mrs. Matthews said.

MEDICOS MEET IN CONVENTION

Springfield, June 8.—With many prominent physicians and surgeons in attendance, the 146th anniversary of the Massachusetts Medical Society got under way today at Hotel Kimball. The meeting will be resumed tomorrow, concluded with the annual discourse by Dr. Charles F. Painter of Newton.

The program for today consists of a luncheon of the secretaries of the district medical societies and the addresses of several physicians, including Dr. Charles H. Mayo of Rochester, Minn. The annual meeting will be held in the ballroom, to be followed by other addresses on medical science.

VETS JOIN PLEA FOR MUTINEER

Washington, June 8 (I.N.S.).—Scores of veterans of the 30th Division, A. E. F., today, joined in the effort to save Bennet J. Doty, also known as "Gilbert Clare," from a French firing squad on a charge of deserting the French foreign legion at Damascus.

Telegrams and letters poured into Washington to back the appeal for clemency made to the French government by Secretary of State Kellogg through Ambassador Herrick at Paris.

According to a dispatch from Paris today, War Minister Painleve declares that Doty will not be executed until a full investigation of this case has been made. The minister has cabled the French commanding officer at Beirut ordering the suspension of Doty's reported sentence temporarily at least.

Chief hope for the former Memphis youth lay in the good record he made while fighting the cause of democracy in France in the World War. The appeals of his former comrades, officials believe, may lend an effective touch of sentiment.

A moral obligation only moved the State Department and Senators McKellar and Tyson of Tennessee to send the appeal for the soldier, since it was pointed out that he had committed himself to the law of the French army. If the facts of his desertion are as reported, there remains little doubt here but that a court-martial would impose the extreme penalty.

GIRL OF 15 MISSING; HER MOTHER IS ILL

Mrs. Gilbert H. Mason, wife of Dr. Mason of No. 354 Adams street, Dorchester, has had a nervous collapse and is confined to her home because of worry at the failure of police of many cities to find her 15-year-old daughter, Doris, who disappeared with her chum, Louise Powers, No. 18 Neponset avenue, Dorchester, last week.

The two girls disappeared, it is said, after they had been scolded at Dorchester High School for being absent one day. They took plenty of clothing with them, and were believed to have been well supplied with funds.

THE GIRL OF TODAY is the big theme in Beatrice Burton's new serial which begins next Monday in the Boston Evening American. You liked Burton's "GILDED KISSES" and her "PIRATE OF HEARTS." You'll be wild over this. Remember, next Monday.

The Boston Girl of 1926.

A title for a clever girl. Selected as a result of the Boston Evening American's quest for the young woman most typical as a smartly dressed, modish girl of pleasing appearance, she will be justifiedly proud of her cleverness. For she will have accomplished such things marking her as an outstanding girl.

She will first be commented upon favorably and chosen for her chic and style by a style authority of national reputation.

This is Miss Lucy Park, associate editor of Harper's Bazar. Miss Park will come from New York to sit with the judges choosing the Boston Girl of 1926 from among the candidates the Boston Evening American brings to their notice.

PROMINENT JUDGES.

Likewise the girl finally chosen will have occasioned favorable notice from three other experts in art and posture. Mr. Cyrus Dallin, distinguished sculptor; Mr. Royal Bailey Farnum, art director Massachusetts School of Art, and Mr. L. W. Sargent, director of the Sargent School for Physical Education.

She will stand to the forefront among prepossessing young women as clever in her style of dressing, erect and dignified and graceful in her carriage and artistically correct and pleasing in her charm.

However, please do not allow the distinction and authority of the judges to create the opinion that they will be extraordinarily difficult to please. Not so in any way. They will doubtless value simple charm and naturalness and innate good taste in dressing. And every smart young girl possesses these qualities.

SEND YOUR PHOTOGRAPH.

Have your photograph before these judges. Send it in showing you in a chic dress which sets off your personality to advantage.

Photographs as received are filed and made ready for the judges. Some are published. Beyond that the Boston Evening American does nothing. The judges alone are responsible for the final selection.

Of those submitting photographs, three girls will ultimately receive the following rewards: first, a silver laurel wreath and $500 in gold; second, a harpin miniature of the silver laurel and an evening gown valued at $250 or $250 in gold; third a harpin miniature of the silver laurel and a street ensemble valued at $100 or $100 in gold.

PICTURES TAKEN FREE.

Friends or relatives may submit photographs of typical Boston girls of 1926. Any young woman desiring a photograph taken to submit for the consideration of the judges may come to the Boston Girl of 1926 Editor anytime during the day and a likeness will be made free of charge. Come prepared to be photographed.

In submitting photographs please identify them fully: name, address and telephone number; and describe raiment worn fully.

ALL FRANCE IN SACKCLOTH

Paris, June 8 (A.P.).—The period of "sackcloth and ashes" predicted some time ago by Joseph Caillaux, former Minister of Finance, is upon France, and the public accepts it with resignation, but reluctance.

It is part of the battle to save the franc and it anticipates restrictions in the consumption of bread, meat and other necessities.

A committee of four—Minister of Public Works De Monzie, Minister of Commerce Daniel-Vincent, Minister of Agriculture Binet and Minister of the Interior Durand—which will manage the regime of restrictions, started its work today.

FEAR REPRISALS.

The ministers will tread warily, for they know that increased tariff barriers will provoke reprisals abroad to the detriment of France's export trade, and that restrictions carried too far will have a bad effect on home industries and frighten away tourists.

Bakeshops, it is expected, will be closed one day each week. Fancy bread and rolls will be prohibited, and flour for cakes and pastry severely rationed. Butcher shops will close once, and perhaps twice, weekly.

WILL CUT IMPORTS.

There are to no bread cards, which it would take time and money to print and distribute. There may, however, be cards for articles imported in large quantities, such as gasoline, coffee, sugar, wool, cotton and coal, notably British hard coal.

A number of members of Parliament are advocating the formation of a national administration by an addition to the present cabinet of leaders of other political groups.

CROWDS HONOR SACRED HEART

By JAMES WALSH.

Solemn novenas in honor of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, now in progress in the three Jesuit churches of the city, are attracting great throngs to both the morning and evening services. The Rev. James F. Mellyn, S. J., of Boston College, is conducting the one at the Church of the Immaculate Conception, Harrison avenue and East Concord street; the Rev. Robert Swiderski, S. J., of Woodstock, Md., the one at Holy Trinity Church, Shawmut avenue, and the Rev. Charles J. McIntyre, S. J., at St. Mary's, North End.

Triduums in honor of the Sacred Heart will be the general rule in most of the churches of the Boston archdiocese, beginning tomorrow night.

The Rev. Leo E. Sullivan will conduct the services for the triduum to be held in St. Margaret's Church, Columbia road, tomorrow, Thursday and Friday evenings at 7:45. They will consist of devotions in honor of the Sacred Heart, sermon, singing by the congregation, and Benediction of the Most Blessed Sacrament.

The triduum will be brought to a close on Friday evening with a solemn reception of new members into the League of the Sacred Heart and a renewal of the Act of Consecration. Special music will be a feature. Masses will be celebrated on Thursday and Friday mornings at 6 and 7 o'clock.

The triduum to be held at St. Stephen's Church, Hanover street, North End, will be conducted by the Rev. Charles J. Ring, rector, and the Rev. John H. Powers, assistant. The morning masses will be at 7 and 7:30 o'clock. The evening services will consist of rosary, sermon, Act of Consecration and Benediction of the Most Blessed Sacrament.

SOLVES RIDDLE OF MODERN GIRL

Another Beatrice Burton story. If you read "Gilded Kisses" and "A Pirate of Hearts" you know what an absorbing yarn Beatrice Burton can spin around the modern girl.

Now comes "Tarnished Wings," a novel that goes to the core of the problem. Is the girl of today really something new or is she the same old Daughter of Eve that beguiled man in the days o the hoopskirts. That's the question that is answered in "Tarnished Wings" which starts next Monday, June 14, in the Boston Evening American.

"Tarnished Wings" is a story of swift tempo in keeping with the whirl and rush of modern life. It reveals in a rich panorama the jazz, bright lights, and excitement which are the chief characteristics of these post-bellum days.

The flapper came with the cessation of war. She is apparently a new and daring creature. But is she any different from those old fashioned girls that are so often held up as an example to this generation? If you want the answer read "Tarnished Wings."

CHINESE STRIKE JUDGES ACCUSED OF GRAFTING

Canton, June 8 (A.P.).—It is reported that General Chang Kai-Shock, military commander here, has arrested all judges of the strikers' courts, accusing them of exacting illegally large sums of money from merchants on the pretext that they have been importing boycott merchandise. Pirates have broken the seals to and looted the Stout Memorial Hospital (American) at Wuchow, recently closed on account of strike activities.

THE GIRL OF TODAY is the big theme in Beatrice Burton's new serial which begins next Monday in the Boston Evening American. You liked Burton's "GILDED KISSES" and her "PIRATE OF HEARTS." You'll be wild over this. Remember, next Monday.

BEATS HEAD ON FLOOR AND BREAKS THE PEACE

Pittsburg, June 8.—David Platts, 50, of Summer street, who lives alone, was taken into custody on a technical charge of disturbing the peace today after police broke into his apartment and discovered him beating his head upon the floor. Cries and sounds of crashing furniture aroused neighbors, who notified police. Officers John Quigley and Harry Tasley found the apartment littered with broken furniture.

ARMY IS "UNIVERSITY OF EXPERIENCE," SAYS DAVIS

St. Louis, June 8 (A.P.).—The Army was described as a great "university of practical experience" by Secretary of War Wright F. Davis in an address today at commencement exercises of Washington University here, of which he is a graduate. Secretary Davis said that when he became head of the War Department he found, much to his surprise, he was head of a great educational institution attended for varying periods of time by nearly half a million students every year.

5,791 AUTO LICENSES IN NEW YORK STOPPED

Albany, N. Y., June 8 (A.P.).—The road of the law-breaking automobile driver in New York State is rapidly becoming paved with revoked operator's licenses.

Charles A. Hartnett, commissioner of motor vehicles, announced today that during the first five months of this year 5,791 licenses were revoked or suspended for violations of the law. In May the commissioner reported that there were 881 revocations and 815 suspensions, as compared with 425 revocations and 873 suspensions in April.

DOUBT IF WATERWAYS BILL CAN BE ENACTED

Washington, June 8 (A.P.).—The prospect of rivers and harbors legislation at this session of Congress was discussed today with President Coolidge by Chairman Dempsey of the House Rivers and Harbors Committee and Jones of the Senate Commerce Committee.

It was the opinion that the omnibus rivers and harbors bill passed by the House last week should be enacted before Congress adjourned, although there is apparent in Senate circles a doubt whether this can be done.

They keep those dazzling Complexions with a matchless toilet soap

Castile!* Nothing else! The aristocracy of Spain—the beauties of Castile and Aragon; of Valencia and Madrid—famous for the dazzling beauty of their firm, fine skins—have used this matchless jabón duro for six hundred years. And of course the virtue of Castile is no news to the women of America. They have always known that there has never been anything to compare with this pure bland soap. Our news is this: we have made an exquisite Castile, a Castile charming as well as virtuous, a joy to use, the finest toilet soap in the world. Molded daintily for a woman's hand; "hard-milled," the better to last—so that you can use it freely. Doña Castile will give you a gracious bland cleansing lather quickly, even in lukewarm water—and will rinse off instantly! For your convenience, you can get it almost anywhere. For ten cents. Delicious Doña Castile! Armour, U. S. A.

BOSTON HEIRS FIND 'FLAW' IN WILL

The will of Mrs. Mary Crilley Sterling French, wealthy recluse, formerly of Watertown, was tampered with the day after her death, according to testimony of a stenographer in the contest brought in Chicago by Mrs. Elizabeth Burgus and Mrs. Margaret McKay, Boston heirs, and others.

Mrs. French left her $50,000 estate to Mrs. Harriet Dalhman, a neighbor, according to the will offered for probate.

Startling testimony was given by Florence Dorschener, stenographer for Edmund Ostronski, who said, he drew the will.

Miss Dorschener testified that on the day after Mrs. French died, Ostronski ordered her to copy a will dated the previous day. He also ordered her to change the will, she said, making himself the executor of the estate and dating the instrument December 22, 1925, instead of January 8, 1926.

The plaintiffs contend Mrs. Dalhman, Ostronski and Harry Papke, one of the witnesses to the will, are all related and that a conspiracy exists to obtain the French estate.

Mrs. French lived for years in her tumble-down house in Park Ridge, a Chicago suburb, where neighbors told of seeing a ghost stalking about clad as a bride. As a result of these stories she came to be known as the "ghost woman."

SPRECKELS TO BE CREMATED

San Diego, Calif., June 8 (A.P.)—John Diedrich Spreckels, seventy-three, capitalist, who died after a long illness, funeral services will be held tomorrow. Mr. Spreckels was one of the outstanding figures in Western financial, artistic, political and maritime life.

The services will be held at the Spreckels Coronado home. The body will be cremated.

His active life had to do with much of the pioneering of the sugar business, but his sphere of activity extends to newspaper publishing, sailing vessels and steamships, development of trade with the antipodes, banking and real estate.

Surviving members of the family include two brothers, Claud A. and Rudolph Spreckels. Claud Spreckels of San Diego, a son; Mrs. Alexander Hamilton of Menlo Park, and Mrs. Paul Wegeforth fo Coronado, daughters.

NORFOLK, CT., WOMAN LEAVES $1,000,000 ESTATE

Norfolk, Ct., June 8 (A.P.).—Miss Mary Eldridge, known for her philanthropic work, who died March 19, left an estate valued at $1,018,891.87, according to an inventory filed in Probate Court here. Her will made cash public bequests of approximately $100,000, of which $10,000 is for Yale University, $50,000 for the Norfolk Library and $21,000 for the Ecclesiastical Society of the Congregational Church of Norfolk. The Norfolk Downs Golf links was left to Edward L. Swift of Easton, Pa., a nephew. The remainder of the estate is to be held in trust for five nephews and nieces.

HUB SCHOOL JANITORS GET $4 RAISE IN PAY

Not a single voice was raised in opposition when a motion was brought before the Boston school committee to increase the salaries of school janitors $4 per week. They will now receive $32.

The request was made by Business Manager Alexander M. Sullivan, and establishes a minimum rate for custodians and regular substitutes. The board also ordered the transfer of $118,790 from the Washington-Allston district to be used for the construction of a five-class room addition in the kindergarten-primary unit at Corey road and Washington street, in the Bennett district, Brighton.

MEDAL FOR LIFE SAVING GIVEN QUINCY OFFICER

Officer Walter McKenna of the Quincy Police Department, one of the chauffeurs of the department, was presented with a gold medal by the Massachusetts Humane Society for saving a man from drowning.

McKenna was loudly applauded as Capt. Bishop pinned the medal on the uniform of the officer.

The rescue was made last April when officer McKenna saw a man jump or fall off the bridge over Furnace Brook. McKenna jumped overboard in full uniform. He swam to the rescue of the man and brought him ashore.

3,000,000 COUNTERFEIT WHISKEY STAMPS SEIZED

New York, June 8 (A.P.).—Three men and 3,000,000 counterfeit stamps were seized early today in a raid on a lithographing company office.

Agents were sent from Washington eight weeks ago upon the discovery of a counterfeit Internal revenue stamp used in sealing whiskey bottles. Clews led them to Rose street. Two Federal agents climbed a fire escape today, forced entrance through steel fire shutters and found the men at work.

MRS. MUMFORD IS ON LIST OF KING

Boston Woman Among 24 to Be Presented at George's Court

By GERTRUDE LADY DECIES.

London, June 8.—The hearts of the debutantes began to flutter forty-eight hours before the ordeal of the first courts at Buckingham Palace this week. A longstanding custom has always delayed the official issuance of the names of those to be presented until the morning of the court, but the identity of several of the twenty-four American girls who will curtsey before the King and Queen on Wednesday and Thursday nights was disclosed.

Only eight on the list are debutantes, while the majority are wives of prominent business men. Among the best known is Mrs. Harry Brown of Pittsburgh,* who has been prominent for her entertainments in London for several seasons. Rumors have been revived this year of her engagement to the Duke of Leinster, which may be announced before the end of Summer.

Mrs. William Ellis Scull of Philadelphia; Mrs. Demarest Lloyd of Washington; Mrs. George Mumford, of Boston; and Mrs. Curtis Brown, wife of a London literary agent, also figure in the functions at Buckingham Palace this week. Each court will be followed by a ball.

There are a number of girls in this week's lists with close American connections, the most notable being Marcella Duggan, daughter of the Marchioness Curzon of Kedleston, and already reputed the most beautiful debutante of the year.

BETTY ALDEN'S COMMENT ON SOCIETY

Continental Royalty and Eastern Princes to Attend London Season

NAVIGATING THE JUMPS

Miss Barbara Welch, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. Sohier Welch, is shown putting her mount over the jumps at Waveney Farm.

THE PRETTIEST SET OF debutantes ever to be presented at court; a London chock full of imposing visiting royal personages; a lovely Swedish Princess a-visiting at Buckingham about whom all sorts of charming romantic rumors persist—are colorful incidents to the delayed but never more brilliant season just opening in the British capital.

DELAYED BY THE RECENT labor upheaval, the famous season at the world's most important and imposing court gets off to a spectacular start with this week's evening courts at Buckingham, when a quota of unusually attractive debutantes don the three-plumed headdress and other accoutrement and ride to the palace.

PRINCESS ASTRID, beautiful blonde from the North, arrives in London today, on the eve of the first court of the season and at which she is one of the most important, much paragraphed and photographed debutantes.

SHE WILL BE staying at Buckingham for a month or six weeks as the royal guest of Their Majesties. Levees and fetes will be royal hosts and functions with personal friends as hosts sparkle on the social calendar in her honor.

CONTINENTAL ROYALTIES flocking to London for the season include those popular Belgians, King Albert and his smartly turned out spouse. Queen Elisabeth, the King and Queen of Spain, and the Queen of Roumania.

SARTORIALLY SPEAKING, this is an unequalled queenly trio—the handsome Victoria of Spain, Marie of Roumania and Elisabeth of the Belgians, each the epitome of feminine smartness and chic.

ALSO LONDON BOUND are the President of France, the King and Queen of Jugo-Slavia and King Fuad of Egypt, a goodly measure even for London to hold in the height of the season. Also on the list are four Indian princes, adding richness to richness.

FABULOUSLY RICH are, these Eastern potentates. First to arrive is the Maharrajah of Rajpipla, Prince of an Indian state rich beyond the wildest dreams and so Fame has it, one of India's most famous hosts.

WITH HIS SUITE OF aides-de-camp, secretaries and servants he will be staying at the Savoy until the end of August, when a departure for the United States is on the cards, so present plans outline.

NEXT COMING is His Royal Highness, the Maharajah of Patiala. Fabulously rich and a host given to lavish expenditure, his entertainments last Summer electrified even London, where annually these wealthy Princes swoop down for a holiday.

LAST SUMMER the town buzzed of him and his suite, his occupancy of the entire "millionaires' wing" at the Savoy; of his magnificent party the night before he departed for his Indian hills; and of his daily appearances in the most perfect of London clothes and a turban bearing a king's ransom in jewels.

HARDLY LESS PRODIGAL with his untold riches, the Maharajah of Kapurthala, well known Summer-time figure in London is expected late in June, later in the list, but of foremost importance is the Maharajah of Jodhpur.

THE PRINCE OF JODHPUR, polo's wealthiest enthusiast, descends on London accompanied by a string of thirty pole ponies and players. Surely even the always brilliant London season shines resplendent in promise.

PARTIES GIVEN by these Eastern princes outshine even the gay and giddy affairs presided over by fair and immensely wealthy Americans, and their attendance at royal levees and state functions at Buckingham give the charm and color of a fairy story.

AMERICAN HOSTESSES have made their arrangements for entertaining with rare foresight—and for the next three months plans are completed—including parties for the Richmond Royal Horse Show for tennis at Wimbledon and for polo at Hurlingham.

ALSO FOR THE HENLEY Royal Regatta on the Thames, the Thames international motorboat races, the Goodwood race meeting, Cowes Regatta week and other internationally known sporting fixtures attracting the eyes of the world.

BOSTON'S TWO SMART young women, Miss Anne Beekman Ayer and Miss Eloise Lawrence, whose social debut here was to have had the cachet of court presentation, abandoned their plans to go to Buckingham and sailed for home during the recent social disturbances in London.

MISS AYER, WITH HER PARENTS, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Fanning Ayer of Boston and Hamilton, have but just arrived in this country from England, while Miss Lawrence and her mother, Mrs. John S. Lawrence, returned some two weeks ago.

PRESENTATIONS ARE only postponed, however, for these two important debutantes who have on the Autumn and Winter calendar large balls in their honor and any number of less spectacular affairs.

STAGE LIFE IS AGONIZING TO CANTOR

Rosenblatt Hopes to Pay His Debts Soon and Go Back to New York Synagogue

By RUTH MUGGLEBEE

"We live to learn."

With this touch of sophistry Cantor Josef Rosenblatt, known to his host of admirers as "Kleine Yossie," excused his appearance in film theatres and in the same breath labeled himself a martyr for his implicit trust in man.

"You surprised? Me here where girls with almost nothing on sing and dance and run around. It is bad, I tell you. But what to do?" His heavily bearded head shook in meditative assent.

"True he is the object of the jesting and unkind criticism of his brothers in the synagogue, but to Cantor Rosenblatt all things are possible, even the realization of the fulfillment of every obligation, moral and civil.

With difficulty, his English "broken," he spoke the best he could.

"Some bad people, yes, bad because they fool me and make me lose everything. Not only me, but others. It is for them that I sacrifice myself and my dignity, that they will get back their money.

"They tell me they make Jewish newspaper. They use my name. Good, yes? I sign the notes. I am, what you say, yes, financial backer. I stand good for them. And so they, yes they swindled me of $133,000. They say they make Judaism live forever. They preach the gospel, yes. But they fool me, what can do?"

The cantor said he had already reimbursed creditors with $45,000. He will remain in vaudeville another season, he said.

With his liabilities wiped clean the Cantor Rosenblatt will return to his congregation in New York, where a contract for fifteen years is still open to him.

MELLON'S NEPHEW IN "SLUSH" FUND PROBE

Washington, June 8 (A.P.)—W. L. Mellon of Pittsburgh, nephew of Secretary Mellon, is among a list of sixteen witnesses summoned to appear before the special Senate campaign investigating committee in its inquiry into Pennsylvania Republican primary expenditures.

Like the Treasury Secretary, Mr. Mellon was a staunch supporter of Senator Pepper, who was defeated by Representative Vare of Philadelphia in a three-cornered race which Governor Pinchot was the third candidate. The three candidates have been "invited" to appear before the committee Wednesday.

"CITY FATHER" ACCUSED IN "SCANTILY CLAD" PARTY

Garfield, N. J., June 8 (A.P.)—Jack More, city councilman and chairman of the Police and Fire Commission today faced impeachment as a result of a "family party" of 300 men, at which five scantily clad women are alleged to have given an objectionable performance. A committee was appointed at an indignation meeting in the First Presbyterian Church to engage state counsel against More. He recently was involved in an altercation with Police Captain Morrison, who charged the councilman with encouraging textile strikers to defy the police.

The Massachusetts projects are: Leominster, $145,000; Malden, $178,000; Waltham, $166,000, and Winchester, $94000. The government contemplates having most of the supplemental projects, as well as previously announced allocations, under construction by next year.

POLICE DOGS TO GUARD WOMEN FUGITIVES

Shackles and Solitary Cells Await Vermont Jail-Breakers Held in Philadelphia

Rutland, Vt., June 8 (A.P.)—Shackles, solitary confinement cells and two police dogs are to supplement more ordinary methods of confinements when two women jail breakers are returned here from Philadelphia.

The women are Mrs. Emma Wilson, forty-eight, and Mrs. Helen Keahey, eighteen, who were arrested yesterday on fugitive warrants by Department of Justice agents in the Pennsylvania city.

They had escaped from the Riverside Reformatory here after serving three weeks of long sentences on Federal charges. Mrs. Wilson had been sentenced to three years for violation of the narcotic laws in Nashville, Tenn., while Mrs. Keahey was to serve two years on a Federal automobile act charge.

When arrested in Philadelphia, officials queried Vermont officials what disposition was wished and in reply received a telegram saying: "No room here any longer. We don't want them." Despite this, however, both were held without bail.

SEWER BLAST ROCKS N. Y.

New York, June 8 (A.P.).—Wreckage of near-earthquake proportions in the region of the Hudson River day line pier at 129th street today told a tale of a grim battle between the combined forces of firemen, police and surgeons against a spectacular fire caused by terrific sewer explosions.

Eleven men were injured, one seriously, when gas in a seven and a half foot sewer exploded. The explosion, heard for Miles, rocked buildings, tore heavy beams from the runway of the Fort Lee Ferry House, twisted railroad and street car tracks and hurled manhole covers nearly half a mile away. Fire started immediately under the pier and raged fiercely for nine hours before river and inland fire fighting forces extinguished it.

A train with 300 passengers aboard is reported to have been caught by the flood between Bucharest and Jassy, and fears are felt for the travelers' fate.

SLEEPING THUG GETS 6 MONTHS

Worcester, June 8.—Charles Brouker, twenty-five, of Pittsfield, "Worcester's sleeping safe cracker," who was found dozing in an office in the Massachusetts Protective Association Building, No. 18 Chestnut street, with a pistol in his lap will sleep in the House of Correction for the next six months.

He won a bunk at Sheriff Richardson's hotel when he pleaded guilty in the District Court to a charge of carrying a revolver without a permit. He was held in $1,000 for action by the Grand Jury on a charge of breaking and entering with intent to commit larceny.

Brouker said he wandered into the building searching for a place to sleep. He said he thought it was a school.

USE HANGMEN'S ROPE TO TIE UP MUSEUM LOOT

Worcester, June 8.—Tying up their loot with a section of hemp used by the sheriff in the last official execution in Worcester County fifty years ago; two small boys were making away with curios of the Worcester Historical Society Museum when frightened into dropping the bundle.

The rope was one of many historical mementoes the boys took after smashing their way into the museum through a transom. Other articles included old-time firearms, knives, medals, watches and a modern Springfield rifle.

They had just finished tying up their bundle on the lawn before the eyes of passersby when the arrival of U. Waldo Cutler, director of the Museum, scared them away.

Cutler, hurrying into the building to telephone the police, slipped and sprained an ankle. The police reported failure to find the boys and the director angrily revealed the robbery, which occurred Sunday, in a public statement today on "the colossal indifference to crime displayed by the youth."

AMERICAN Y. C. AT NEWBURYPORT OPENS

Newburyport, June 8.—Weather conditions did not keep the members of the American Yacht Club from the clam chowder and musicale that marked the formal opening of the commodious quarters last evening. The urgent notification issued by Commodore Thomas A. Hilton and Secretary William D. Harris had the effect of assembling most of the yachtsmen around the colors.

WADSWORTH IS FOR DRY REPEAL

Washington, June 8 (A.P.).—Senator Wadsworth, Republican, New York, standing for renomination, came out today for repeal of the Eighteenth amendment and the substitution for it of "a simple grant of power to the Congress" to deal with the liquor question.

He expressed the hope that, with this done, Congress and the States, through congressional authority, "could establish in this country, in accordance with local sentiment and desires, some such system as prevails in the Province of Quebec."

He added that this "plan, as a result of the government taking over the sale exclusively of all alcoholic beverages and forbidding the consumption of those beverages upon the premises where sold, does away with the saloon and the private liquor traffic."

GULF

NO-NOX

MOTOR FUEL

STOPS KNOCKS

Turns Mountains into Mole hills

FOR many years mechanical engineers struggled to build automobile engines of higher compression. As compression is increased the power line goes up and the fuel consumption line goes down—ordinary gasolines would not withstand this higher compression without knocks, clicks, or detonations—accumulated carbon deposits increased this compression by decreasing the size of the combustion chamber—and the audible sounds of the engine distress grew louder.

It has been our good fortune to produce a gasoline that positively eliminates clicks, pings, and knocks.

Gulf No-Nox and Carbon are Power Twins

GULF No-Nox Motor Fuel withstands compression to a high degree; carbon, increasing the compression of the engine, ceases to be a nightmare as long as it does not interfere with valve action. In other words, it puts carbon to work. More power and greater efficiency is thereby accomplished, resulting in greater mileage.

With GULF No-Nox Motor Fuel in your tank—step on it—you will get the story better than we can tell it.

This Guarantee goes with it

GULF No-Nox Motor Fuel is Non-Noxious, Non-Poisonous and no more harmful to man or motor than ordinary gasoline—that it contains no dope of any kind—that the color is for identification only—that it positively will not heat the motor summer or winter.

GULF No-Nox Motor Fuel is priced three cents per gallon higher than ordinary gasoline—and is worth it.

"THE AMERICAN WEEKLY" IS THE MOST WIDELY CIRCULATED MAGAZINE IN THE WORLD

"I have $100,000 to spend . . . and every cent of it must produce!"

WHEN a certain manufacturing corporation of moderate size decided to go into national advertising, the president called in his advertising agent and put the proposition up to him.

"The appropriation for this first year is $100,000," he said. "What do you advise doing with it?"

"I'd put it into a campaign in The American Weekly," the other told him.

"The American Weekly? Tell me more about it."

The agent laughed. "You've read it hundreds of times without knowing it," he said. "It's the Sunday magazine section of the fourteen Hearst newspapers. It's a real magazine, printed in newspaper form, with feature and news articles, fashion hints, household department, and everything a magazine ought to have. It's the biggest magazine in the world, moreover—5,000,000 copies every week!"

The president opened his eyes. "That's circulation," he admitted.

"But only a beginning," the other added. "Those 5,000,000 copies represent 5,000,000 families, aggregating 21,900,000 men, women and children—almost one-fifth the total population of the United States! Think of that for a market!"

"That may be," said the president, "but are they the sort of people who will buy?"

"Buy?" repeated the other. "Buy? Do you realize that three-fourths of the money in this country today is concentrated right in these fourteen areas where the standard of living is the highest in the world? Of course they buy! They make good money, and they spend it."

"All of which leads me to suspect that The American Weekly must be a very costly publication in which to advertise," the president objected.

"If they offer so much, they probably want a lot for it."

"On the contrary," the other answered, "it's the most economical publication for the advertiser that I know of. When you consider its tremendous circulation, you'll realize how low these rates are: $8.00 per line, $1.69 milline; a black-and-white page will cost you $14,500, a color page (inside) costs $15,000, and the back cover in color is $16,000. For 5,000,000 circulation, that's dirt-cheap!

"And you want to remember," he pursued, "that The American Weekly is the only national medium in which you can take a full newspaper-size page in color. Have you ever heard the saying, 'if you want to see the color of their money—use color'? It's absolutely true. I'm advising you to use color pages in this campaign.

"What's more, when your advertising is running, and the returns begin to roll in, this great urban market will permit you to cash in quickly and efficiently, because it requires no unwieldy organization to reach and serve it. The city market is always the one where you get the best and easiest distribution of your product.

"That's why I recommend The American Weekly. From all sides and from every angle—no matter how you look at it—it's the greatest advertising medium in the world!"

Write today for specific data on the world's most widely distributed magazine. A. J. Kobler, President.

The American Weekly has its peak circulation where the buying-power is—in the fourteen American cities having one-fifth of the total manufactures, three-fourths of the total bank clearings, one-third of the urban population of the United States.

ROBBER PLEADS GUILTY; HELD IN $25,000

Alleged Everett Hugger Indicted on Charge of Slaying Policeman Lonergan

John Miller of Brooklyn, N. Y., indicted today with three others by the Middlesex County Grand Jury, for the robbery of a grocery store in Magazine street, Cambridge, pleaded guilty and was held in $25,000 bail for disposition of the case tomorrow.

A second murder indictment against Carmine La Priori, alleged Everett hugger, charged with slaying two Everett policemen, was returned by the Grand Jury, which handed up a partial report of eight open and two sealed bills. The second indictment against La Priori charges him with the murder of Police Officer John J. Lonergan of Everett on May 5. He had previously been indicted for the murder of Officer William H. Staples.

The three others indicted with Miller in the Cambridge robbery are now facing trial in Brooklyn on a charge of slaying a woman in a similar robbery in a Brooklyn store. The same trio, according to dispatches, figured in a jail delivery plot in Brooklyn which was thwarted by the warden. They are William and Admir Barsnick and John Martin, alias Maxwell.

Charles R. Polkins, manager of the Magazine street store, was held up and robbed by four armed men. They got $56. The trio held in New York were arrested in Darien, Ct., while fleeing from Cambridge, according to police.

JAIL AND $350 FINES FOR "LOADED DICE" GAME

John Yackinawick had the stiffest gambling sentence ever imposed in South Boston Court handed him today by Judge Edward L. Logan after police said that when they raided his home in Dorchester avenue, they seized a dozen decks of marked cards and several sets of loaded dice.

Yackinawack was fined $100 and sentenced t othree months in the House of Correction for maintaining a gaming nuisance. He also was fined $250 on a charge of larceny that grew out of a complaint by a player at Yackinawick's home that he had been cheated out of $75 by crooked gambling. The raid followed the complaint. Fines and sentences were appealed.

CHILEAN LEADER FAVORS TACNA-ARICA PLEBISCITE

Santiago, Chile, June 8 (A.P.).—In the Chamber of Deputies today the Conservative member, Louis Cabrera, declared a plebiscite to determine the sovereignty of Tacna and Arica, as provided for in the award of President Coolidge as arbitrator, was the only way to settle the controversy between Chile and Peru over the two provinces. Any talk of partition in the provinces, Senor Cabrera said, was absurd.

KIDNAPED BRITON FOUND DEAD IN CHINESE RIVER

Hong Kong, June 8 (A.P.).—The body of J. M. Phillips, British manager of the Asiatic Petroleum Company, has been found in the river at Nanking. Mr. Phillips was kidnaped by bandits several days ago. Soldiers were sent to try and effect his release and it is presumed the bandits killed him.

SLOAN DRANK 'WHISKEY LIKE GLUTTON'

The late "Dr" Earl S. Sloan, discoverer of liniment, drank whiskey and wine, "like a glutton" and took morphine every three hours, a witness testified today in Suffolk Court in the $50,000 suit of Charles W. Clark, Sloan nurse, who claims Sloan promised to take care of him and his wife for life.

The witness was William R. Marshall, also a trained nurse, of North Carolina. While Sloan was in a North Carolina sanitarium in 1922, Marshall said, he had eight male nurses attending him at one time.

Sloan was very exacting, the witness said, kept all eight of the nurses busy furnishing him with different kinds of wines and liquors. Sloan was a connoisseur of good liquors, Marshall declared.

Every three hours, Sloan took morphine, Marshall testified.

Marshall followed Clark to the stand. For an hour and a half, Clark's attorney, C. F. Choate, made an unsuccessful effort to get his client's testimony into the record. The court ruled every question a reiteration of previous testimony and rebuked Choate for his persistent attempt.

Clark contends that Sloan promised to leave him and his wife enough to maintain them for life, in return for his promise to care for Sloan until the latter's death.

Clark was a pal and friend of Sloan, Marshall said, and transacted business for him, even buying stocks and bonds.

Cross-examination of Marshall by Attorney A. L. Mayberry of the defense, hinted that the defense would attempt to show that if Sloan made any promise he did so under the influence of a powerful drug. This drug, Marshall said, was a mixture of heroin, morphine and strychnine. Morphine alone had no effect on Sloan, the witness said. Despite his use of drugs, he was "foxy" and sane, Marshall declared.

Mrs. Marie H. Clark, wife of the plaintiff, told of a conversation with Sloan in North Carolina in which Sloan said he would take care of her and her husband for life.

BROOKHART WINS IN 'CORN BELT REVOLT'

Find Skeleton of Girl, Missing 31 Years, in Maine

Mysteries of a House Where Ghosts Walk Revealed by Great Woman Writer

Illustrations from paintings done in oil especially for this serial by W. D. Stevens.

Peter gave one look at the shadowy figure and howled like a hyena.

Professor William A. Porter becomes owner of Twin Hollows, a country and shore estate of his deceased uncle, Horace Porter. Porter lives with his wife, Jane, and niece, Edith, at the University in which he teaches. Jane manifests every evidence of mediumistic ability. She "sees" many things that are inexplicable. The Professor determines to occupy the mansion left by his uncle. It has a neighborhood reputation of being haunted. Jane objects to living in the house and compromises in an agreement to live in the Lodge. Warren Halliday, sweetheart of Edith, comes to Twin Hollows and lives in the boathouse.

Then begins a series of the most marvelous ghostly happenings. The Professor believes that his uncle may have been murdered. Other crimes committed are blamed by the neighborhood on the ghost inhabitants of the Twin Hollow mansion. Circumstances entangle the Professor in an apparent indication of guilt. The Red Lamp figures in these manifestations.

Detective Benchley enters the case. He evidently believes the Professor responsible for the mysterious crimes.

The Professor rents the house to a mysterious Mr. Bethel who has a secretary named Gordon. Dr. Hayward, town physician, is added to the number who suspect Porter. Mr. and Mrs. Livingstone call on the Porters. Mrs. Livingstone reveals mysterious happenings in Uncle Horace's house. Professor Porter and his wife receive a message from the "spirit world" warning them of danger.

Mr. Bethel and his secretary arrive. Bethel and the professor discuss the mysterious crimes that are stirring the village.

TELLS HOW TO STOP CRIME

Prof. Faris Declares Cause Must Be Studied and Jail System Reformed

What is the cause of crime? How can it be prevented? These two questions are today occupying many brilliant minds in a vain search for a solution. Universal Service herewith presents the findings of one of the most learned sociologists of the day.

By PROF. ELLSWORTH FARIS, Head of the Department of Sociology at the University of Chicago.

Chicago, June 8.—Crime is always present in all but the most isolated and static communities.

We prevent disease. Yet in spite of all our efforts, we must have hospitals to cure the sick. We shall never be able to abolish crime completely, and the present situation in Chicago, and Illinois, especially, focuses attention upon the treatment of criminals after they have been apprehended, tried and convicted.

And it is here that the weakest and stupidest aspect of our civilization is apparent. Our penal institutions could hardly be worse. It is no exaggeration to say that they never do anybody any good. Not that we must do without penal institutions, for when a crime is committed it is imperative that something must be done about it.

But the Penal institutions, run as they are by politicians, officered by men who look upon their position as political sinecures and conducted by men utterly ignorant of modern psychology and sociology, offer a spectacle which would be ludicrous were [illegible] not so tragic and expensive.

Model Prison

I have visited many prisons [illegible] the one which stands out as the bright spot in a series of very dark pictures was that of [illegible] of the military prison at Fort Leavenworth.

Prisoners hopelessly [illegible] in mind or body were assigned to hospitals. Then the remaining men were formed into a disciplinary battalion to be trained and educated in habits that would enable them to do their part in the army.

Some of the men served only three months. On an average the prisoner served only half of his original sentence, but all of them were sent back into the army as soon as it was apparent that they could take their places again as obedient, disciplined soldiers.

I call attention to [illegible] successful prison system because there is at present, a violent attack upon the parole and indeterminate sentence system.

That such a system has been woefully abused by corrupt men is very clear from recently printed revelations. But the remedy is not to do away with the system.

What is needed will be long coming, but it will be needed all the more. It is an attitude that will result in a cool analysis of the causes of crime so that they may be removed by a [illegible] flexible and [illegible] regime.

JAZZ RELIEF IN 'DEAREST ENEMY'

Tremont's Musical Comedy Is Bright and Cheerful, Satisfying

By NICHOLAS YOUNG

More than once it has been loudly trumpeted that the Irish won independence for the American cause in the grilling days of the Revolution; anxious patriots with an eye to multiplied votes for office have screamed it and we still have record that the sturdy Celt played his noble part from the landing of the Pilgrim in Plymouth to the more strenuous hours at Lexington, Concord and Bunker Hill.

Now we have musical comedy to prove the entire case. No longer is it a matter for debate—or doubt. For Betsy Burke of Murray Hill, in Manhattan, snapped a saucy finger at the Hessian British minions, tricked the King's best soldiers into an all-night orgy while good old Israel Putnam rushed up reinforcements—and the war was won. Of such was "Dearest Enemy" at the Tremont, in which Helen Ford, sweet, winsome and very Gaelic, made herself exceedingly proud of the part played by women in the struggle for freedom.

SUMMER EXPERIMENT.

"Dearest Enemy" has moved in to the Tremont for a summer experiment. While not designed to fill the usual specifications of hot weather entertainment there was, nevertheless, enduring qualities in its unfolding. An army of experts were concerned in its making—authors, composers, directors and, finally, John Murray Anderson, British soldiery acted many fine gentlemen than our Uncle Sam's textbooks have pointed out. Yankee girls of the period appeared at least one step, if not two, ahead of their bobbed haired sisters of today. With genuine musical comedy indifference to details the Redcoats had only half a chance with Manhattan's fairest.

What a brogue that was all her own, Miss Ford played have with General Howe's younger officers and managed, in the end, to pick out for herself the best tenor in an invading regiment. Charles Purcell, the hero of many musical comedy campaigns, came through in rare form. His voice was satisfactory in the singing numbers, and his acting measured up to the best standards of musical comedy farrance.

FILLS THE BILL.

In no small measure Miss Ford fitted into the delights of the performance. A charming personality, a small but pleasing voice, and a delicious sense of comedy, combined forces in her favor. And if history may be taken as serious, she was not the first Irish colleen to toss an honest heart to a gallant grenadier.

"Dearest Enemy" filled the eye from many directions. In costuming it presented the best period of the Revolution in detail: full skirts, flounces and frills predominated; the dancing numbers were many to gaze upon in spite of their Eighteenth century modesty. Two stage settings of exquisite beauty formed the frame of an exquisite stage picture.

After a season of jazz, froth, burlesque and acrobatics in musical shows, "Dearest Enemy" should easily make its way. It was bright and cheerful, tuneful and satisfying. For this relief may be extend a modest offering of praise and gratitude to Helen Ford and her talented companions.

'POUF', SAYS HELEN TO HATED BRITISHER

HELEN FORD DEFIANT

As the Yankee heroine in "Dearest Enemy" at the Tremont, Miss Ford, as Betsy Burke, stirs up tons of trouble for the pesky Redcoats. Richard Powell as General Tyron, may be observed taking bitter medicine.

MARION DAVIES FILM SCORES

Another of those triple picture programs with five vaudeville specialties delighted the audience at the Bowdoin square Theatre yesterday. The big feature on the bill presented Marion Davies in "Beverly of Graustark," from the novel by George Barr McCutcheon. Miss Davies brought into play all her personal charm, and the ease and grace in which she portrayed her role found favorable comment throughout the house. The cast which supported Miss Davies was a good one, and conspicuous in one of the leads was Antonio Moreno, an artist of much ability.

Another picture that found favor offered Claire Windsor and Owen Moore in "Money Talks," a comedy of real mirth, which provided a number of thrills, too. The third picture feature was Harry Carey in "The Texas Trail."

WESTERN FILM AT ORPHEUM

New Mexico is the picturesque background for the screen feature "Rustling for Cupid," at the Orpheum. It is an adaptation of Peter B. Kyne story and his latest contribution to the films. The athletic star, George O'Brien and Anita Stewart have the principal roles and Irving Cummings did the directing.

Most of the action takes place on a cattle ranch and in a typically western village, where the interest is centred on a feud between the Cattlemen's Protective Association and a cattle baron, who is suspected of rustling. The supporting cast is well chosen and in it appear Russell Simpson, Herbert Prior, Edith Yorke, Sid Jordan and Frank McGlynn, Jr.

The headline act of the Orpheum vaudeville bill is Leon and his death ray gun—a remarkable demonstration of shooting a shell containing a young woman through a wall of steel armor plate without injury to either the woman or the stage.

Other acts, short picture subjects and the distraction contest for girls round out the program.

6,000 KIDDIES RUN OWN CIRCUS

Boys and Girls Take Over Big Arena at Close of Big Performance

Even the Wild West riders were excited.

While circus officials and school teachers incoherently attempted to stem the stampede, 6,000 boys and girls of the Charlestown schools turned and captured the big arena of the Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey's combined shows at Sullivan square at the conclusion of the afternoon performance, and staged a circus all their own.

It was childhood's fondest dream come true. With the blare of the band's last march drowned out in a babel of music and shrieks and cries of delight, the kiddies converged all over the huge arena, boys and girls alike trying out the various circus apparatus they could reach, and rolling about the five rings.

The Wild West troupe was in the center of the arena, ready to go on. After some fifteen or twenty minutes they did go out. Grown-ups hurried back to the safety of the reserved seats, but the youngsters had the time of their lives until, after many minutes, teachers and circus officials restored order.

The Charlestown kiddies, guests of Councillor Thomas H. Green of the Charlestown district, marched to the show grounds headed by the circus band. They occupied a large section of the 10,000 seat big top and gloried in the performance.

They cheered the five troupes of elephants, 55 in all, as they made their appearance right after the grand cavalcade, and held their breath as Lillian Leitzel twisted about high over their heads.

May Wirth's wonderful riding and dancing atop her bareback horse drew gasps of delight, while the performing dogs, and horses, and seals long held them interested. The Selesti family of tumblers, the Royal Ramnae Takrow players, the Hoohani troupe of ground to shoulder gymnasts, the clowns, Clarence, the Milanos, and the hosts of acrobats, tight wire artists and bareback riders performed their best for Charlestown's kiddies.

Every afternoon and evening performance despite the rain, drew large crowds. The circus is as complete as ever, with a number of new attractions.

MEDLEY STAR TOPS BILL AT KEITH'S

Miss Patricola Scores With Songs Given to Her Violin Accompaniment

Miss Patricola, sparing the time from her phonograph recording, leads the list at Keith's and is "putting over" her songs in the manner that makes them stay put. And she plays the violin, too—its muted strings crooning a soothing obligato while she sings. Her selections in are a medley of popular tunes from "Deep in County Clare," and by request, an especially vivacious rendition of "Alabamy Bound."

Dave Appollon and company present what he calls "An Apollonial Revue" and, incidentally, one of the most remarkable demonstrations of versatility to be seen in vaudeville. He plays the piano and the mandolin—and then both at the same time! He next brings out an accordion, squeezes strange sounds from it and discards it to do an energetic Russian dance. The removal of a back-drop later reveals a string band in which he again takes the leading part. He closes with a dance contest that sweeps the audience off its feet.

For low comedy, Joe Marks bears away the honors with a consistently hilarious skit termed "And Then She Fun Began."

Johnny Hyman, in "Playing Pranks with Webster," skillfully composes impromptu rhymes and [illegible] in transposing, via the answer, various nonsense culled from the headlines of the daily press.

Bob Anderson leads forth a polo pony that really seems to be able to add figures; Ted and Al Waldman, in backface, perform wonders on the harmonika, and Douglas Charles and Company appear in a most humorous athletic act. Other turns complete the bill.

RAY GRIFFITH JUST AS FUNNY AS HE CAN BE

Another Feature of Show at Metropolitan This Week Is 'The Dance of Joy'

For all those whose interest in the cinema, as presented in the modern dress of the up-to-the minute picture palace, runs to criticism, the performances at the Metropolitan this week is recommended without reservation as one that represents the best in this rapidly growing branch of entertainment.

On the screen appears a feature comedy in which Ray Griffith, said by some to be the funniest man in the films, trips and stargers through the most excruciating and less slow Charlie Chaplin skit making two-reelers. From the stage the glorious voice of Cantor Josef Rosenblatt rises high and pure in the devout strains of "Elijah, Rise," and in the John Murray Anderson specialty, "The Dance of Joy," the butterfly figure of the ballet floats airily about to the accompaniment of Tschaikovsky cadenzas.

And so there's a great deal more. The organ rolls forth melody—and humor; the orchestra surges through the overture, and the short subjects provide their own interesting variety. But to get back to the picture.

"Wet Paint" is the title and it is the most energetic feature that the top-hatted Mr. Griffith has yet made in his rapidly ascending career. In fact, this one sends him up with a zoom, for it has the approval of the audiences love—the gags that won the way for Harold Lloyd—and the pantomimic gifts of a star that seems bound to one day edge in safely between the two. Beyond any question, the support too, is excellent. Helene Costello, Bryant Washburn and Harry Sother do the honors and of these, the last named gentleman bears most of them away as he moves with Griffith through the long alcoholic jaunt that occupies most of the feature. All in all, it's a great show at the "Met" and one that Mr. Caroline Critic himself simply cannot afford to miss.

"BIG PARADE" WILL CLOSE ON JUNE 19

"The Big Parade" will definitely end its triumphant run at Majestic Theatre one week from next Saturday, June 19th. There are doubtless many theatregoers who have postponed seeing this entertainment, owing to the length of the engagement, but now the end is merely one week away. The performances this week and next, however, will be the last.

'STILL ALARM' AT NEW BOSTON

The screen feature at the New Boston is "The Still Alarm," starring William Russell and Helene Chadwick. The story was adapted from the old stage melodrama by Joseph Arthus and A. C. Wheeler, and is the thrilling story of the glorification of the fireman and of the hardships he has to be subjected.

Miss Chadwick plays the role of the unfaithful wife and Mr. Russell, the forgiving husband who, through his inability to support his wife, loses her. The cast includes Richard Travers, Edna Marion, Dot Farley and Jack T. Murray.

The [illegible] revolt of the week starts early Chase in a whirl of [illegible] entitled "Long Five The Kids."

The feature vaudeville presentation will be Dave Harris & Co. in "A Musical Musical Comedy." Two skilful dancing acts include Jean Moore & Edison Brothers and the Three Sargent Revue of songs and dances. Carl Hall & Co.; Heron & Davis and Jack & Rita La Pearl.

ERLANGER NOT IN ANY MERGER

A. L. Erlanger yesterday an[illegible] that he will not join, or in any manner co-operate with, the proposed merger of theatrical interests which [illegible] financial brokers have been seeking to form during the past two years.

In statements to the press it has been said that, in addition to Mr. Erlanger's properties, those of various independent managers in all the principal cities of the United states would be included. According to the prospectus the capitalization of the [illegible] was to be $50,000,000.

Mr. Erlanger's decision to stay out despite intensive persuasion to join the merger, naturally leaves him in a position to operate his own properties in his own way.

By joining in the proposed merger, Mr. Erlanger admits that he would be assured of a princely income without ever doing another stroke of work. But this was one of the leading reasons for his refusal. The local theatres over which Mr. Erlanger exercises control are the Hollis, Colonial, Tremont and Park.

JEFFRIES AND SHARKEY TOGETHER IN SKIT

An [illegible] which will [illegible] memories of two of the most popular gladiators of the past and present circle is scheduled for Loew's Orpheum Theatre for the week of June 14. There will be the appearance on the stage, in a friendly act written especially for them, of James J. Jeffries, former heavyweight champion of the world and Tom Sharkey, [illegible] failure to become champion can be ascribed only to the fact that he fought in a day when there was an over-abundance of opponents aspirants for the honor.

GRACE LA RUE, CHANEY, RIVALS

Something of the spirit of rivalry pervades the performance at Loew's State, where Grace La Rue appearing in person on the stage, and Lon Chaney, whose re-created version of "The Penalty" is shown on the screen, vie for the favor of the audiences.

Miss La Rue presents some new songs and some stunning gowns which she has lost none of the vocal charm she has many times displayed on former occasions on Boston stages when she appeared in vaudeville, or when last seen in musical comedy with Hale Hamilton in "Dear Me."

In "The Penalty," Chaney has another of his great character roles, which he plays with his [illegible] still—especially in the direction of the make up box.

George Lyons, "The Singing Harpist," strums the strings and sings melodiously the while, but whether the singing is the accompaniment to the strumming, or just the other way round, would be difficult to say, so well does he perform in either direction.

A Verdi program is Philip Spital nys selection for the musical feature, Scenic and news subjects complete the bill.

RUNYON SAYS:

Stribling Next Champ? Can Beat Old 'Punch 'em' Training in Carolina The Georgian's Hobbies Should Be Great Fight

—By Damon Runyon—

Copyright, 1925, King Features Syndicate, Inc

FOR some strange reason, the impending battle for the light heavyweight championship of the world between Paul Berlenbach, the title holder, and Young Stribling of Georgia, two of the most spectacular exponents of The Manly Art of Scrambling Ears now before the public, has received scant notice.

They are to meet in the Yankee Stadium on the night of June 10. It ought to be one of the greatest struggles in some respects in the modern history of boxing. It presents two young fellows at their very peak of pugilistic prowess, and probably the most widely advertised men in the game. Certainly Stribling, "The Georgia Schoolboy," enjoys that distinction.

Damon Runyon

Yet while I read much of prodigious contests between second and third raters I find little mention in the public prints of the Berlenbach-Stribling match, and moreover, I hear little chatter about it. This strikes me as most inexplicable. The thing appeals to me as a subject of conversation.

I hold that this is the best match of recent years. It brings together one of the most powerful punchers I have ever seen in the Astoria Ox and one of the shiftiest, smartest, "cooniest" boxers of the day in Stribling. I wouldn't be at all surprised to see Stribling out-gallop the plodding Paul, though I have been one of Berlenbach's strongest admirers long before he was seen on the pugilistic big time.

I HAVE heard ringworms argue that Stribling can't fight, that he is strictly a showman in the ring, with much spectacular flourish and many tricks and holds, but without real spirit [illegible].

I cannot agree with this opinion. I have noticed that while the youthful Georgian may merely flounder through some bouts out in the pugilistic provinces where no decision is involved, any time he reaches the big tent in a contest of real importance, you invariably find him in front at the finish.

He is a showman, no doubt of that—one of the greatest the game has ever known. He hop-scotches about the land putting on a sort of pugilistic act with mediocre opponents, training but very little for them, exerting himself no more than he has to. But when the occasion arises that he has to fight, he FIGHTS.

He is a far faster man afoot than Berlenbach, and a better boxer. Of course, this is his first fifteen-round bout to a decision against a real puncher like Berlenbach while Berlenbach has the advantage of having campaigned over that route a number of times. But on the other hand, Stribling has had a far more varied experience in general than Berlenbach, against a greater variety of opponents.

THEY met once before in a six-round bout, and there was little to choose between them at the finish. The distance was too short to give a real line on them.

The last basis of comparison between them might be their respective battles with Johnny Risko, but I am inclined to think you can toss that out. Berlenbach ran into a wild punch early in the fight from which he did not recover for several rounds, and while he lost the decision the result might have been different in fifteen stanzas.

Stribling out-scored Risko without trouble. Some of the witnesses think that the Georgian didn't care much for Risko's body punches, and argue that Berlenbach who is a tremendous body puncher, will cut him down by way of the anatomy. Still other observers say that the body punches that seemed to bother Stribling were foul punches.

One thing is certain, Stribling is training for this bout more earnestly than he ever trained before. His father the redoubtable "Pa" has his son working at Hendersonville, N. C., in the camp just vacated by Jack Dempsey, and I am informed that the boy is in great condition.

JONES HAS STRONG GRID TEAM ON COAST

Los Angeles, June 7.—With six weeks of Spring training rounding his players into form, Coach Howard Jones' football men today begin to resemble the Pacific Coast collegiate champions of 1925. The University of Southern California, although represented by wonder teams in the past, has never won the Far West title.

The present schedule calls for only nine games, six of which are members of the Pacific Coast conference, Washington State, Stanford, California, Oregon Aggies, Idaho and Montana. If the Trojans can eliminate this redoubtable half dozen they will have earned their first Pacific Coast title.

BABE SAYS HE WILL K.O. N.E. CHAMP

Newport Johnny Brown and Kid Rice to Clash in the Semi-Final

By JACK CONWAY

FEATHERWEIGHTS will rule the fistic throne tonight when Babe Herman, mighty puncher from California, battles Chick Suggs of New Bedford in the feature ten-round bout at the Suffolk Club's show at Braves Field.

Jack Conway

Herman and Suggs are two of the outstanding featherweights, both capable of giving Kid Kaplan a bitter battle for his world's title.

It will be the second meeting between these sturdy fighting machines. They engaged in their first conflict in this city last February. On that occasion Herman's heavy right hand artillery gave him the margin of victory. He whacked Suggs with a right hand thrust on the chin in the first minute of the battling and he was never headed.

It was the only defeat Suggs has suffered in two years. He attributes his setback to the fact he made 118 pounds for a Friday night bout with Abe Attell Goldstein in New York and then hurried to Boston to swap blows with Herman on Monday night.

Suggs agreed to make 127 pounds for Suggs, but came in overweight. Rather than disappoint the fans, Suggs, weighing 124 pounds, went in and fought. It was a hard, close fight with Herman's terrific punching power gaining the advantage over Suggs' speed and cleverness.

IT will be another case of a puncher against a boxer tonight. Herman will rely upon his famous right hand sock, while Suggs will resort to clever milling.

The rival warriors are on the scene of the contest and prepared to battle at a dizzy clip.

"I won't be satisfied unless I knock Suggs out," declared Herman. "You can take it from me that I'll have the New England champion in a horizontal position on the canvas before the tussle ends.

"I found in my last quarrel with Suggs that he is easy to hit. I nailed him with a right hander on the chin in the first round and clipped him plenty of times after that. After I polish off Suggs, I shall demand a return engagement with Kid Kaplan."

WE told Suggs what Herman planned to do. The "New George Dixon" grinned good naturedly, showing a set of shining white teeth.

"A lot of fellows have been going to knock out Chick Suggs," said the New England champion, "but somehow I am always in there at the finish. During the past two years, I have won 70 fights against the best bantamweights and featherweights in the world.

"Herman is the only fellow who has beaten me. I don't think I was right when I battled Babe. I had fought Abe Attell Goldstein in New York three nights before and was tired from battling my way through snow drifts to get to Gotham and then back to Boston.

"All I say is that I shall win tonight. I don't claim I shall knock Herman out as he's a remarkable good fighter. But I'll throw enough gloves at him to beat him beyond the least question of doubt. I have always been a pretty good decision fighter.

"Don't overlook the fact I have been training for Herman since I bested Sammy Fuller. I want to win this contest more than any in which I have ever engaged and you may be assured I shall do so."

STRIB HOPES TO SQUELCH OOM PAUL

New York, June 8 (A.P.)—Paul Berlenbach of Astoria, N. Y. and Billy (Young) Stribling of Atlanta, Ga., who meet in championship combat at the Yankee Stadium here Thursday night, often have informed the public that they are ready and willing to "meet any man in the world."

Their 15-round battle, therefore looms as one of the most interesting fistic engagements of the year according to critics.

Berlenbach, a reformed wrestler, has not dodged the issue since winning the light heavyweight title from the defensive expert, Mike McTigue, last Summer. Paul went into the ring that night despite the fact that illness had interrupted the final days of training and he emerged with the crown by virtue of a 15-round decision.

The performance of this week's combatants against the Cleveland Baker, Johnny Risko, may furnish ground for comparison, yet past events have proved that in many cases this sort of argument is not worth while. Risko boxed Berlenbach and Stribling beat Risko.

The young Georgian, who finished his intensive preparation here today insists that he will knock out Berlenbach.

"Pa" Stribling confided that if Billy wins the light-heavyweight title he will be ready to defend it within thirty days.

Fore River Joins 'Twi' Circuit

Fore River was officially accepted as the eighth member of the Boston Twilight League circuit at the weekly meeting of the organization at the Quincy House.

The new nine will play its first game at Quincy tomorrow evening with Malden furnishing the opposition.

The scheduled game between Lynn and Everett at the latter city this evening has been called off, and all the teams will remain idle.

The game between South Boston and Lynn, cancelled because of the rain last evening, will be played at South Boston, Thursday night.

The proceeds of the regular league game between South Boston and Dorchester at South Boston tomorrow evening will be given to "Twilight Bill" Kelley, one of the directors of the Peninsula Club, who is confined to the hospital at present.

CAPT. HOLMAN TO REFEREE POLO TILTS

New York, June 7.—Captain O. I. Holman of the United States Army has been named by the officials of the United States Polo Association as the referee for the annual intercollegiate tournament which starts on the field of the Westchester Biltmore Country Club at Rye June 19. Five teams, Yale, Harvard, Princeton, West Point and Pennsylvania Military College, are entered in the event.

Captain Holman, himself a player, is a graduate of the cavalry school at Fort Riley and has become known to New Yorkers of late through his connection as instructor with Squadron A, where he has been instrumental in advancing polo. He handled the tourney last year and, in addition, refereed the intercircuit championship at Philadelphia.

PRENTON TIES GOLF LINKS RECORD

Formby, England, June 8 (I.N.S.)—The North England open golf championship opened here today with a number of American competitors. Emmett French, the first Amerian entry to complete the first round, turned in a score of 42-438—80.

Jurado, the Argentine professional, returned a card of 41—40—81.

With the field about two thirds in some of the best scores were T. E. Howard, Australia, and H. C. Jolly, with 72s, Aubrey Boomer and James Adwick of Olton, with 73s, and C. A. Whitcombe, with a 74.

Hagen and Barnes were late starters, the latter being the last American to get away. Hagen's fives on the second and fifth holes were each one over bogey figures. Barnes began [illegible] getting a birdie three on the first hole, and was only one over fours on the first five holes.

Al Watrous finished with a 76 and Jim [illegible].

Mehlhorn's card was as follows:

Out ....4 4 5 4 4 3 5 4 4—37

In ....5 3 3 4 4 4 2 5 4—34—71

Fred McLeod [illegible] to appear.

When it was found that Joe Kirkwood [illegible] partner, through [illegible] the management allowed [illegible] Newton, an American amateur, who is entered for the British open, to play around with him. Newton is not a competitor in the present tournament however, as it is limited to professionals.

Today Armour completed the round in 77.

Cyril Walker turned in a 74 for the round, while Bill Mehlhorn got a 71, just missing a 70 by losing on a putt on the last green. Walter Hagen got an 82.

Joe Stein finished the round with an 83, while W. H. Davies of Prenton turned in a 70, the best score thus far made and equalling the course record.

Al Watrous reached the course in 39 and Jim Barnes in 37.

PUNCH MAKES MALONEY HERO

The enthusiasm of fans for the comeback of "Dan" [illegible] Jim Maloney, South Boston heavyweight, indicates that his approaching ring battle with Carl Carter, Cuban heavyweight, at Mechanics Building next Monday night will prove one of the most popular fistic fixtures of the season in the Hub.

After three months' work in the gym Maloney has demonstrated the fact that the rest improved his punching ability and in spite of his long layoff he is almost sure to go into the ring a favorite over the Cuban giant.

The possibility of a knockout probably accounts for Maloney's popularity. The fans realize that the South Boston man is always trying to put over the big punch and never in his career has this ambition been higher in his thoughts.

And in Carter Maloney will meet a man who will be just as eager to swap punch for punch. For Carter is a knockerout. He has demonstrated this fact. One round for Bud Gorman's limit against him.

In addition to three six-round preliminaries which will be on the card Eddie Mack will present what ought to be one of the best semi-finals of the season.

Terry Parker of the North End, winner of his last ten starts, will meet Steve Smith of Bridgeport in a return fight.

School Relay Finals Today

The finals to the eighth annual outdoor relay carnival for intermediate and elementary schools of Boston holds sway this afternoon on the greensward of Tech field, Cambridge. Competition has been divided into five classes, including intermediate ninth grades.

The preliminaries to this event have been held already and the table is all set for the finals in the University City saucer. Nathaniel J. Young, director of physical education in Hub schools, expects a record breaking list of competitors on hand.

Schoolboy Stars Need Most Care in Training

By STED CHANDLER.

Are high school track coaches burning out their youthful stars? This is a serious question, for with the increasingly startling performances which are being registered almost daily by prep and high school runners one is forced to wonder why so many of them fail to live up to promise after entering college.

Scan the lists of collegiate track stars and you will find few names which created much of a sensation during their owners' school days.

On the other hand you will notice among the also-rans a strangely large number of men who, while in school, had the track world by the ears.

Sted Chandler

Running is a sport which demands in an athlete a certain amount of maturity. The youthful runner is a flash like a sulphur match—brilliant, but soon burnt out.

The undeveloped heart may have all the will of a Trojan but it cannot have the stamina. It is easily over trained, easily abused, quickly worn out.

A schoolboy star who is properly trained, held down on speed, his own exuberance, can be developed into a luminary of enormous magnitude who will continue to shine across the athletic firmament throughout his college career and even afterward. But the one who is allowed to "run his own race," to set his own pace, is almost certainly heading toward his own athletic destruction.

Frank Hussey [illegible] Was [illegible] [illegible] may be [illegible] a number of [illegible] Hussey's case [illegible] he ran a lot and ran hard and the effect of this on a youth [illegible] may be seen either in [illegible] or mental manifestations.

Craig La Vin, like Hussey, a Brooklyn schoolboy [illegible] at Poly Prep. He is now [illegible] the Yale squad [illegible] heard from him.

Such cases [illegible] less to mention names. Sometimes they come through; sometimes not. The curtailment of their orbit [illegible] have other elements than over training as contributory agents. But the fact remains that young runners have a strong tendency to overdo, and this tendency, which certainly produces results in the beginning is too often allowed to run its course by the men under whose supervision they are.

College ranks would be swelled to a much greater extent than they now are would the coaches of prep and high school track teams lay [illegible] on the futures of their charges than on the immediate results. But immediate results hold [illegible] both absorbing and [illegible].

Morgan and Sullivan in Hot Water Over Bout

New York, June 8 (I.N.S.)—Tod Morgan, junior lightweight champion; his recent challenger, Steve (Kid) Sullivan, and those connected with last week's title bout, including the referee, judges and seconds, have been summoned before the State Athletic Commission to explain the unsatisfactory ending of the match.

They will appear before the board either this afternoon or Thursday, it was said.

Dissatisfaction with the abrupt conclusion of the bout was expressed after Paddy Roche, Sullivan's manager, threw in a towel in the sixth round while Sullivan still was on his feet and apparently ready to continue.

BOSTON baseball fans, super-stitious as fans always have been and will be, have the arithmetics and the pencils out. They're busy figuring the Braves' chances of getting back into diamond [illegible]. The Braves, hopeless tailenders a week ago, are now being doped as possible pennant contenders.

The Kid Was a Newsboy

LIFE OF A FIGHTER, IN TEN CHAPTERS

By TAD

CHAPTER 1.

THE Kid was a newsboy. He had a younger brother who peddled papers, and between them they kept the little house that their widowed mother lived in. There were three in the family, and the Kid was the Protector-in-General.

He had his corner for papers, and no one ever poached on it. He was a natural born scrapper, and fought for the place he had won. The Kid was a hard worker. He went to school in the day time, and in the afternoon and evening, sold papers on the corner.

He had a happy little home. He loved his mother and he loved his kid brother. He was studying hard in school because he wanted to become someone in this big world some day and make his poor old mother proud of him.

On a certain afternoon the kid brother, who sold papers down the street, came running up to the Kid with tears in his eyes and told him that someone had hit him. It was one of the boys in the neighborhood, and the Kid was on the job in a minute. He was going to find the fellow who did it or die. Any one that hit his kid brother was due for a trimming. The crowd followed the Kid down the line as he started on the hunt

Health Commissioner Bigelow Says about Automobiles

"Because it has greatly improved popular appreciation of the wholesome, fresh, open country—the automobile certainly makes a beneficial contribution to public health."

Automobile ownership, possible to almost every American family through liberal financing plans, also offers a wealth of education and recreation by enabling families to enjoy travel at their convenience.

To keep informed as to the most interesting places to visit and best car to "visit in," read the automobile news and advertisements in the Boston American and Boston Advertiser.

BILL McKECHNIE DENIES REPORT OF BURRUS' TRADE

BOSS RAPS AT TRADE FOR BRAVE

Pittsburgh Pilot Squelches a Rumor of an Impending Deal With Tribe

By DAVIS J. WALSH,
I. N. S. Sports Editor

New York, June 8.—The writer today asked Bill McKechnie, Pirate manager, to name the best club he had seen to date barring his own and his reply [illegible] characteristic. William said he hadn't seen the second best National League club as yet, but expected to rectify the matter when he reached the Polo Grounds with the Pirates late next week.

[illegible] will have to beat," he declared. "Of course, I saw them in Pittsburgh on their last western trip, but that wasn't the club that is playing smart baseball for McGraw now. They have been moving right ahead for several weeks and will be back with the pace, sooner or later. We have seen no reason to figure any other club seriously."

DAVIS WALSH

In denial [illegible] Bill says he is a stand-patter, regardless of reports that he is trying to trade George [illegible] and Eddie Moore to the Boston Braves for Dick Burrus. He [illegible] the idea down with these few, well-chosen words:

"I have seen no one, offered to trade no one and desire to do business with no one. I'm tired of having outsiders try to conduct my affairs. I have a good ball club and happen to be aware of the fact. I'd be a sap to start experimenting with a good thing."

Yes, McKechnie is satisfied with his ball club and not without reason. In spite of his remarks he [illegible] had to do some rather radical experimenting this Spring with a world's championship outfit because neither Moore nor Barnhart was able to hit the ground with his bat and Max Carey was ill and [illegible] for that matter.

Protest of Lynn Nine Turned Down

President Davidson of the New England League has refused to uphold the Lynn Club's protest of the game which Portland won at Lynn on May 31st. Manager Bader of the Lynn club based his protest on the grounds that a ball batted over an embankment in left field on which the batter was retired [illegible] the play went out of sight of both umpires.

Before the game a ground rule was made by both managers and the umpire-in-chief to the effect that "everything goes in left field" according to the prexy. This ground rule would never have been made if it had not been anticipated that a ball might be hit over the embankment, hence out of sight. Therefore, I can see no grounds for protest," states Davidson.

BOXING PROMOTER FINED FOR GREASING ATHLETE

Akron, O., June 8 (A.P.)—On charges of using rubbing oil on one of his boxers, Suey Welch, local fight promoter and manager, has been fined $100. Secretary Ayres of the Barberton Boxing Commission announced today.

Golf Notes

Although many golfers have been loud in their criticisms of the United States professional team which made such a dismal showing against the British last week all will be forgiven if the home boys come through in the British open. They may be off their strides at present, but they will recover in the next two weeks and the outcome will, in all probability, be to the liking of golfers on the western side of the Atlantic.

There should be some fine golf next Monday at the Essex County Country Club. The cream of the professional golfers of New England will be battling for the seven low scores which will entitle them to enter the United States open at Columbus next month.

The South Shore Country Club is in the best shape it has ever been in. The present plans call for the straightening out of the fourth fair way this Fall, and then the present nine holes will be as high class as any in these parts. The Hingham course is becoming more and more popular each year, and with new members enrolling every month will soon be one of the most enjoyable courses in this district. The new nine holes will not be played until next season.

The sixth hole at the South Shore Country Club is one of the hardest in this State. It is a long hole which calls for a fine drive over the pond, a real second to get over the brook, and a well directed third to get home. When the new nine holes are opened the present sixth will be the eighteenth. A great wind up for a tough round, for those who have played this [illegible] in par figures, are few and far between.

BIKE FANS PROMISED THRILLS

"The reservations made and the advance sale of tickets for last Saturday's racing at the Revere cycle track was the largest since I have been a promoter," said Nat Butler today. "When rain caused a postponement I immediately made arrangements to put on the same program Wednesday night. Not a change will be made in the entire card, and ever since this announcement the fans have been phoning to the track to retain their reservations."

"In Bobby Grassin, George Chapman and Frankie Keenan [illegible] the rollers behind the motors I believe I have lined up a trio capable of providing the gathering with plenty of action and thrills. If Wednesday's battle isn't one of the best ever seen I know nothing about bike racing."

5 HUB WOMEN IN PHILLY GOLF TILT

Philadelphia, Pa., June 8.—Five of the leaders [illegible] Country Club course [illegible] Women's Eastern Golf Championship started this morning.

As a result [illegible] the Women's Golf Association of Boston has five players [illegible] very much in the running for the title.

Mrs. Samuel D. Waxman, who is the present Boston W. G. A. champion, [illegible] second place six strokes behind Mrs. G. Henry Stetson of Huntington Valley Country Club. Despite the heavy going and continuous rain Mrs. Waxman went out in 47 and came in 45 [illegible]. The showing of the Boston country club player was a great surprise to all.

BUDGET A COMPASS FOR FINANCES

Boston Evening American Offers Aid to Housewives in Planning Expenditures of Income

Budget Talk No. 71

By MARTHA LEE

THREE out of every five letters that are received on budgets speak of the problem of paying off back bills and the seeming impossibility of keeping the ship of family finances from dashing against the rocks of debt.

Thousands of people struggle along as best they can from week to week believing they are doing the best they can with the money they have to spend, but if you ask them what it costs them for food a month or how much to heat their home they are at a total loss for an answer. Your ordinary fixed expenses can be estimated fairly accurately and it is sometimes hard to realize how much must be laid aside for the ordinary necessities of life, if your income is limited. It is of course on the luxury that economizing must begin. Even if you are not budgeting I do wish you would set down on paper all your regular expenses and see what they average a week. If the total is well inside your weekly income there is a balance for savings, unexpected expenses, pleasures, etc., and you can be sure you are on a fair financial foundation.

But if outgo is perilously close to the amount of your income or as happens in many cases higher than indeed you are in need of budgets. You know it is waiting for you on receipt of the coupon printed for your convenience on this page.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Our first letter this morning is from Mrs. A. R. F. Has four in the family (two girls, fourteen and six teen), with an income of $41 a week. Her fixed expenses are rent $40, school car fares $1, food $12, school lunches $1.95, husband's lunches $1.75, garage $8.00, entertaining [illegible] $2, payments on kitchen cabinet, $1.35.

Your rent, of course, is a little high for a standard budget, but your nice location is worth a sacri[illegible]

Budget will give you $10.25 for shelter including school carfares, $10.70 for food with the school and business lunches, including $2.75 for [illegible] sewing perhaps you can manage for [illegible] $3.75, including $1.75 for coal (if [illegible] [illegible] requires $7.66 since this must cover $1.75 weekly for garage, 85 cents for papers and magazines, $1.50 for tobacco, $2 for entertainment which you consider educational for the girls, $1.35 on kitchen cabinet.

This leaves only $1 weekly for savings, and I would suggest taking one share in a reliable co-operative bank. This will cost you $1 a month and will bring you excellent interest.

During the Summer, when the [illegible] have no need for their carfares, this money can be used either for savings or unexpected expenses under persona. I have [illegible] the car, as I understand your husband's firm takes care of this.

Mrs. R. E. E.—With $48 a week and three in the family, writes that her sister is doing so well with her budget that she is anxious to start one herself. I would suggest that you save $5 and the other allotments [illegible] $10.50; clothing, $10; operating, $6; perso[illegible]

And here is another budget with [illegible] for Mrs. H. P. T. with a family of five and $40 a week. Has a small automobile and [illegible] for $70 a week: Shelter, $14; food, $17.50; clothing, $10.50; personal, $10.50. Since the expenses of the pleasure automobile as well as the club dues must come out of personal you may need to take something from your operating and clothing budget.

Mrs. H. C., who signs herself "A Friend in Need," asks for help with her budget.

Has been handicapped by sickness and doctor's bills the past two years. Family of self, husband, 10-year-old girl, three boys between six and two and a brother who pays $10 weekly board. Husband makes $28 a week, sometimes $7 overtime. Brother has one meal at home. Has no lunches or carfare for husband. Pays $45 rent, which she knows is high, but is getting a great benefit from her flat, quiet with no traffic and good air. She does a great deal of her own sewing. Pays $2.47 weekly insurance, $3.50 a week on an old bill, piano $3 weekly, music lessons 75c; [illegible] $4 a month, gas never over $10 a month, electricity from $2.45 to 85c. Asks for special recipes which will go forward promptly. Now let's see how a $38 budget [illegible] It would give you $3.50 for savings, $8 for [illegible] $10 [illegible] for food, $5 for clothing, $4.50 for operating, which covers gas, light, coal, and telephone, and $4.0[illegible] personal, out of which must come the payment on the loan, the piano payments, the music lesson, the lodge dues, church money, newspapers and magazines, all [illegible] and recreation and little luxuries such as tobacco, candy, etc. Now let's see what you really are paying. $2.47 for insurance comes out of savings. Your rent is $10.25. Your gas and electricity is 75c a week, and surely you have to allow at least $2 weekly for your yearly supply of coal. This makes $2.75 for operating. The payments on the loan and on the piano amount to $6.50 a week and the music lesson and lodge dues are $1.45 more. This makes a total of $23.52, leaving you $14.48 for food and clothing and nothing for the extras I have listed under personal. You can of course see that it is your rent that overbalances your budget. However, I can appreciate the many advantages for the children, and I think that with careful study you can keep your food bills down to $13. This will give you $1.50 to add to personal and you can put away your husband's overtime money for a clothing budget.

I am writing you a special letter about your cooking problems.

MY DAY

A QUEEN'S DAY!

Well, it is a busy one, I can assure you.

All queens are busy, I suppose, and always busy for other people, not for themselves.

When a day is almost unbearably overfull, with hardly an hour to breathe, then I call it a real royal day!

You see, a queen is a sort of public property. Everybody has the right to want some of her time, either for a personal audience, or to present plans, propose new charitable institutions, to consult her on this or that, ask her patronage, her moral support, and very often her money. Her purse is a sort of open pocket into which all feel they may put their hands.

But sometimes there is not much in her pocket, and then she is very sad.

A queen must always find time for everybody, and often it is mighty hard work. She is expected to grace every sort of function with her presence and her smile.

In my case, the day is complicated by my love for writing, for riding, for my garden, my children and my house or houses.

I begin early, early; yet I always feel I am running a race with time. There seems to be so many people in the world, and they all want something of me—money, wits or sympathy.

Often at the end of an overfull day I have the sensation of being squeezed out—as though overmuch had been required of my heart, my brain and my purse.

All those I have not had time to receive feel they are right in being personally offended, yet I have done my very best. People seem to imagine that a royal person (being nearer the gods, perhaps) must have more hours to the day than ordinary mortals have!

Then of course a queen must never be tired, or bored, or impatient, or ignorant, or anything but indefatigable, all-wise, happy and powerful. She must contrive all things, forgive all things, help all men whether important or otherwise, and her patience must stretch like an elastic, but never, like a hard-tried elastic, must it snap back!

This is my every-day day.

Dr. Reed Discusses Skin Diseases and Their Causes

By Charles A. L. Reed, M. D.
Former President of the American Medical Association.

YOU like many others, may be the victim of that troublesome disease of the skin known as eczema.

Volumes have been written upon it in a vain effort to get it under uniform control but so far with only partial success.

Eczema is a term very loosely used to cover a multitude of skin troubles. Most of these are [illegible] varieties of inflammation of the skin.

This condition is caused by irritation either from within or without, and which will quickly clear up when the irritant is removed.

True eczema, however, may defy suitable treatment for years. This is because eczema requires an external situation as well as an internal factor which latter is probably the essence of the trouble. It can cause an immense amount of misery even if its distribution is limited on the covered part of the body. If it affects the face and hands it is simply a calamity.

The internal factor, Dr. Martin maintains, is partly congenital, and is an inherent predisposition to eczema so that an external irritant which in one person produces a troublesome but curable dermatitis, [illegible] in another [illegible] skin trouble which, even if suppressed for a time, is liable to recur.

The typical eczema subject generally has certain mental and nervous characteristics. Some are unstable and unbalanced or irascible and ill tempered, but most belong to the anxious and worrying type.

[illegible] is sometimes a factor in eczema, for a complex can express itself in physical as well as in nervous or mental abnormalities, and the condition has sometimes disappeared when the complex has been resolved by analysis. The link between the two is probably that in eczema the nerve endings of the skin are abnormally sensitive, probably from the same cause that irritates the whole nervous system.

The character of the external irritants is immaterial for if the predisposition exists almost any kind [illegible] break. They may be mechanical, such as the friction of clothes or an injury to the skin, or chemical, such as a [illegible] or unsuitable soap. X rays have proved useful in some cases, but none of the specifics advertised really work a cure.

The chief use of ointments is to allay the irritation.

The trouble, like most others, can be minimized by sensible dieting, and no rules are much good, since the requirements of individuals differ so widely. The chief thing is to avoid irritants and sources of irritation. Pickles, sauces and salt are [illegible] harmful, as is coffee in large quantities.

Wives Adrift -:- -:- -:- By Mildred Barbour

"Charlotte!" Manning sprang to his feet and began to pace the library. "Do you realize that you're driving me mad? Can't I have candor from you?"

"Why do you want it so much?" she asked with a weary sort of curiosity. "You have taken me back into your home without question, just as I am—or as you think I am. Why do you want a proof that I cannot give?"

"Because I love you! Because the thought of you in Hill's arms drives me insane. Because I want you—the wife I married, the sweet, pure untouched girl that I brought from Virginia, five years ago."

She bowed her head and the hot, despairing tears ran down her cheeks.

She could never betray a one-time friend. She could never tell him the truth.

Two days later Leila came into Charlotte's room while she was dressing for lunch.

"We've a guest for luncheon," she announced. "It's a surprise for you—and a surprise for the guest, too, dad says."

Charlotte went into the drawing [illegible]

Seated beside the open window that let in the breeze from the park was Phyllis Fenway, chatting vivaciously with Manning.

Manning rose, smiling.

"A double surprise, [illegible] You didn't know Charlotte had returned to us again, did you, Phyllis?"

"Why—a no—I—" Phyllis was stammering and a painful red was [illegible] cheeks.

For a moment she and Charlotte stared [illegible] eyes. [illegible] Charlotte reached out her hand [illegible]

"How [illegible] Phyllis," she said evenly. "It's good to see you after so long a time."

For once, Phyllis' poise had deserted her.

"You're looking very well," she managed to articulate.

In the minds of both, the memory of their last meeting stood forth vividly clear.

Hill's rooms at the Atlantic City hotel. The rap at the door which soon was to open to admit Fenway! Phyllis pushed into the bedroom by Charlotte, who voluntarily assumed the blame. Phyllis [illegible] to the other corner [illegible] safety. And afterward silence.

Over the coffee in the drawing room, when Leila had [illegible] her afternoon [illegible] Manning, with a casual sentence, exploded the bombshell.

"Phyllis, I want to confess something. I had a twofold purpose in asking you to lunch here today. In the first place, I wanted to bring you and Charlotte together again and see the old friendship flourish as Leila's and mine does. In the second place, I want to ask a favor of you. Leila must go away for a while by the doctor's orders. I can't very well spare Charlotte." He smiled, but his eyes were grave and significant. "Will you accompany Leila, chaperone her—she needs a deal of chaperoning, I fear?"

HASH BY ANY OTHER NAME.

PERHAPS your family has a complex against hash. It may be because their mental picture of this sometimes despised dish is of a greasy concoction full of bits of gristle and stringy meat. Do not despair of using up your left overs, however, because although hash by any other name is still hash, it can be served as croquettes, cottage or shepard's pie, souffle or an omelet.

No matter in what form you are going to serve your hash, every morsel to be used should be most carefully inspected so that no bit of bone or membrane can creep in. A quarter of the meat used can be fat, but this fat should be chopped very fine.

The standard recipe for hash calls for one part of cooked, chopped meat and two parts of cooked, chopped potatoes, or one part potatoes and one part of some other vegetable such as chopped beets or turnip. Mix all well together and season with salt, pepper, a little chopped onion and a bit of chopped green pepper if this flavor is enjoyed. Moisten with [illegible] gravy water [illegible] [illegible] fat in a frying pan [illegible] to cook [illegible] over like [illegible] The brown [illegible] of successful hash [illegible] [illegible] especially [illegible] for a very appetizing [illegible] is made by making a batter of one cup of milk, [illegible] of flour, an egg, one teaspoon of melted fat and ½ to ⅓ teaspoon of salt. Put the same quantity of [illegible] as you have batter into a [illegible] baking dish and pour the batter over it. Bake in a hot oven (400 degrees F.) twenty to thirty minutes until the crust is done. [illegible] the oldest recipes call for a little chopped suet to be added.

Shepard's pie is really [illegible] glorified form. To make [illegible] fill a shallow baking dish [illegible] individual dishes with cooked meat [illegible] chopped or cut in cubes, seasoned and moistened with stock or gravy. Cover lightly with mashed potato and bake until brown. To make [illegible] a company dish, one or more eggs may be added to the potato, beating them separately and folding in the whites last.

Bubble and Squeak is another hash combination [illegible] renewed popularity by the [illegible] but we haven't room for [illegible] today. However, if [illegible] you care to drop me a line.

crawled out of his [illegible] according to him "the feeling that we were in for a blow." There was a cold wind across my feet.

So he rose, and he saw that our red lantern was burning low, and gingerly stepping across me, reached into a locker for the oil can. When he straightened up he saw a shadowy figure standing in the bow of the boat, directly under the lantern.

Peter's Vision

He thought at first that it was I but the next moment he had stumbled across me as I lay supine and the oil can fell and went a-rolling. The noise did not disturb the figure, and Peter gave a long look at it before he howled like a hyena and brought me up all standing.

It was only then that it disappeared. "Just blew to windward" according to Peter. I never saw it at all.

Peter did not go to bed again all night, but sat huddled by the wheel staring forward, a queer old figure of terror without hope. And I admit I was not much better.

For Peter says that it was that of a man in a dressing gown, and that "it looked like the old gentleman." By which he means my Uncle Horace.

[illegible] Landing, July 13th.

We have had bad news, and are preparing to land and take a motor back.

Edith writes that Halliday has been hurt. She gives no details.

July 14th.

Halliday's condition is not critical, thank God. We found him (Note: In my bedroom, here at the lodge) with Edith and Helena fussing over him and with his collarbone broken, the result, not of the attack, but of his ditching the car.

For he is the indirect victim of an attack.

Halliday Attacked

On the evening of the 12th he was on his way to the station at [Oakville] to meet Helena Lear and Edith who were in town on some mysterious feminine errand, which detained them until the late train.

At 11 o'clock, then, he took the car and started off, and as he was early took the longer route through the back country. The one by Sanger's Mill and the Livingstone place. It was near the drive into Livingstones' that a man carrying a sawed off shotgun stopped the car and asked for a lift into town. He was, he said, one of Starr's special deputies, watching for the sheep-killer.

It was very dark, and he could only see the outlines of the deputy. But as, all along, he had come across men similarly armed—"The fence corners were full of them," he says—he thought nothing of it and told the fellow to jump in.

"I hadn't seen him," he said, "but I got an impression of him. You know what I mean. A heavy square type, and he got into the car like that, slowly and deliberately."

Once in the car the man was taciturn. Halliday spoke once or twice, and got only a sort of grunt in reply, and finally he began to be uneasy. He had, he says, the feeling that the fellow's whole body was taut, and that his silence was covering some sort of stealthy motion, "or something," he adds, rather vaguely.

"And of course he had his gun. Lying across his knees as well as I could make out."

They had gone about a mile by that time, and then Halliday began to smell a queer odor.

"He was not trying to anaesthetize me," he is certain. "He'd had it in his pocket, and something had gone wrong; the cork came out, perhaps. Anyhow, all at once it struck me that ether was a queer thing for one of Starr's deputies to be carrying, and I felt I was in for trouble."

He took his left hand quietly from the steering wheel, and began to fumble in the left hand pocket of the car, where he had put his revolver. And although he is confident he made no sound, the fellow must have had ears like a bat, for just then Halliday saw him raise the gun, and as he ducked forward the barrel of it hit the seat back behind him with a sickening thud.

Detective's Idea

But he had somehow turned the wheel of the car, and the next moment it had left the road. Halliday made a clutch at it, but it was too late, he saw, as the car swung, the lights of another car ahead and coming toward them; then they struck a fence, and the machine turned over.

He had been found, by the people [illegible] unconscious in the wreckage, and brought to the Lodge. No sign of the other man was discovered.

But this story, curious and ominous as it is, is as nothing [to the] sensations today when I visited my small garage, where my car is awaiting insurance adjustment, before undergoing repairs.

The point of the matter is this. Greenough has already been to see our invalid, and has assured him that he has been the victim of an ordinary attempt at a hold up.

"Only difference is," he told Halliday, "that our men around with weapons gave the fellow a chance to carry his gun openly. Gave him a good excuse for a lift, too. Most people around here now aren't stopping their cars for anything or anybody. But of course they'd pick up a deputy."

"I'm not as familiar with crime as you are," Halliday had responded. "But is either part of the modern hold up outfit?"

"It's pretty hard to name off-hand anything they don't use," said Greenough, imperturbably. "From silk stockings up."

Which was, I imagine, a bit of unconscious humor.

So Greenough dismisses the possibility of any connection between Halliday's trouble and the unknown malefactor; in a word my absence has probably not altered his suspicion of me a particle. Or had not for within the next half hour I propose to show him that an absolute connection exists between the two.

On the right hand cushion of my car, which during the salvaging of it was thrown upside down into the rear, there is marked an infinitesimal circle in chalk, enclosing a crude triangle. I have sent for Greenough.

Later. Truly the way of the innocent is hard.

Dr. Hayward was making his afternoon call on Halliday when the detective came, and as I feel confident that the doctor is in Greenough's confidence I was glad to spring my little bombshell on them both at the same time. But tonight I am feeling much like Bunyan's Man in an Iron Cage. "I am now a man of despair, and shut up in it."

Edith was on the veranda when the detective came, and young Gordon was with her. During our absence he has struck up with her an acquaintance of sorts, but she dislikes him extremely. She has, Jane tells me, nicknamed him Shifty.

As Hayward was still upstairs, I sparred politely with Greenough for a few minutes. We had had good weather for the trip, fishing was only fair. It was too bad to be brought back as we were. Yes, but if things like that were going on it was better to be on the ground. "What sort of things?" he asked.

Professor in Deep

"We have had two murderous attacks, haven't we? One successful, and one not."

"So you class this little affair of young Halliday's with the other?"

"Don't you?"

"Not until I've got something that ties them together, Mr. Porter."

Hayward had come in and stood inside the doorway, gnawing at his fingers and listening.

"But if you found something did tie them together?"

"For instance?"

"I'm going to ask you something. Was there or was there not something drawn, on the top of the engine box of the boat from which Carroway disappeared?"

"How do you know that?" he shot at me. And like a fool I said, thinking to protect Peter Geiss: "That doesn't matter, does it? It's the fact I'm after."

"Suppose there were. What would that prove?"

"And suppose I can show you another, and similar mark on my car, made there by Halliday's assailant before he struck at him?"

It was then that Greenough smiled horribly, damnably.

"It's there, is it?" he said, and looked up at Hayward.

"It is there."

He got up, the remains of that smile still plastered on his face, and confronted me.

"That's curious," he said. "I examined that car in the ditch, before they moved it, Mr. Porter. And I've been over it here with the doctor, since. If there's anything there of the sort you describe, it's been put there since yesterday afternoon."

And then I saw where I stood. They believed that, finding Halliday assaulted during my absence, I was attempting to link that assault with the sheep killing and with Carroway's death, and turn it to my own advantage. In other words, to prove that the reign of terror had gone on in my absence!

A drowning man, swimming exhaustedly toward a log which sinks when he touches it, must have much the same sensation that I had, as I stood there facing Greenough's vile smile and the doctor's searching gaze.

"You can go out and look," I said feebly. "It's there."

Mysterious cipher found adds to the perplexities of the professor. Read tomorrow's installment.

Gold Diggers and Dumb Doras -:- -:- By Beatrice Fairfax

WHEN HE ASKS YOU OUT

DON'T BE A GOLD-DIGGER

CHOOSE PROGRAM WISELY

THINK OF HIS POCKETBOOK

THERE are two sides to every question. And the only way to get at the truth is to [be] impartial to both sides.

Not so long ago "An Average Man" wrote a letter to this column in [illegible] girls even [illegible] respectable [illegible] their utmost to seem gold diggers.

He uses [illegible] the fact [illegible] extravagant good times from men who invite them out.

Now comes a reply. We thought the girls would be heard from on this subject.

"Dear Miss Fairfax:

"Referring to [the] article about gold-diggers and a letter from 'An Average Man,' I am the happiest person imaginable because I have procured MY MAN, as has many a girl of today. But through my experiences, I have found—and many a girl can bear me out—that the more a man spends on a girl the 'dearer' she is to him.

"When a [illegible] with a modern young [illegible] and does not make up a[n] [illegible] program that [illegible] money' he feels [illegible] girl is a [illegible] a home [illegible]

"On the other hand [illegible] a young man on the average of once a month or once in two weeks he feels that he owes her a 'good good time' and if he does [illegible] spend money on her he will only [illegible] around with a [illegible] on someone else [illegible]

"Good times are [not] as plentiful as [illegible] off [illegible]. After a girl knows [illegible] play with a man [illegible] matter how extravagant she may have been [illegible] running around' with [illegible] and others, she settles down and [illegible] saving his money as well as her own.

"[illegible] hope "An Average Man" reads this letter and regains faith in modern young womanhood! He will then realize that Miss 1926 is [not] a heartless gold-digger, although she may seem so at times. When she falls in love, she reverses her philosophy that the more a man spends on her the dearer she is to him."

Isn't it a good idea, girls, to go a little slowly in planning the evening's program when a man asks you out, choosing neither the cheapest nor the most expensive entertainment that suggests itself, but a moderate and pleasant middle course? To do this requires sophistication and social tact.

When you discover that your admirer can easily afford [illegible] season's prices grand opera and ritzy clubs, that's another matter.

But, remember, when a young man first meets a girl who interests him, he takes keen enjoyment in finding out her temperament, character and disposition.

"What's the extra dollar for?" he asked.

I made no further kick.

"THE COHAN MIRTH MAKERS"

"THE DANCING PHILOSOPHER"

Some troupe! Four in the cast, eight in the orchestra. The street parade was the big feature. I was the drum major and led the band of eleven pieces—eight musicians besides the manager, property man and dad. The last three played the snare drum, bass drum and cymbals. Mother and Josie followed the band in an open victoria draped with American flags. When business was bad we'd discharge the band, cut out the parade, and give the show with a piano player. When business would pick up, we'd hire a new band and begin all over again. No matter what happened, we always carried the trunk of red uniforms, but whether we used them or not was entirely up to the bankroll. We played about six hundred one-night stands with the "Mirth Makers," and during that time we hired and discharged at least half a dozen brass bands. Toward the end of the second season, during one of our band-less periods the plan went on a spree, so we had to close up altogether and go back to Keith's.

Cast for a Star Part

We were always welcome at Keith's. I heard B. F. say to my father one day, "It's hard work, Jerry, but it's always here when you want it." (It was now 1891.)

We fooled around, playing variety dates in the East for several months until we had saved enough capital to put out another troupe. This time it was a three act farce comedy written by my father which he called "Widow Mulcahy's [illegible]".

It wasn't a very big success, however, as during the second week of what was intended to be a tour to the Pacific coast and [back] again we received a telegram from the Atkinson Comedy Company asking us if we could arrange to open in Brooklyn the following Monday with "Peck's Bad Boy." [illegible] finish of "Widow Mulcahy" production went to the storehouse, the actors were sent home, and we (the family) went straight to New York and hopped into rehearsals the following evening.

I was the happiest kid in the world. [illegible] was I at the age of thirteen cast for the role of Henry Peck "that incorrigible lad with a heart of gold" as the program [read]. Father and mother played Mr. and Mrs. Peck and Josie played the bad boy's sweetheart.

We opened Monday matinee to a packed house [illegible] with laughter at every move I made. I soaked the grocery store keeper with a slapstick and they laughed for a full minute. I pushed the Irish policeman into a tub of soap suds and they stood up and cheered. Mind you, that was over thirty years ago, long before Chaplin had ever tasted a custard pie.

When the matinee performance came to an end I wended my way to the dressing room with the frenzied shouts of approval still ringing in my ears. I was thoroughly convinced that "that guy Booth had nothing on me."

The manager came "back stage" and congratulated my father, mother and sister. I heard him say to them "Your individual performances were perfect." I guess he thought I'd get a swelled head if he "boosted" me, so manager-like, he walked right by my dressing room door without saying a word.

I was on to his make-believe indifference. I smiled at my reflection in the mirror and had a quiet little talk with myself. "Believe me, you'll pay me, old boy." I was going after the manager to beat the band. "If I play this part next season, you'll pay me, and pay me well."

George Cohan figures as the battling "Peck's Bad Boy" in tomorrow's installment.

CORRECT MANNERS

By Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

(1) Who pays for the bride's bouquet? Does the same person furnish the bouquets for the bridesmaids?

(2) When giving silverware for a wedding gift, whose initial should be used? A says the bride's maiden name should be engraved. B says the groom's name should be engraved. MRS. B.

THE groom sends the bridal bouquet to his bride. He may also send the bouquets for the bridal attendants, but usually the bride's father and mother send these, since they are planned as part of the harmony of the costumes of the attendants.

(2) A is correct. The wedding presents, by law, belong to the bride and so they are engraved with the initials of her maiden name.

The Making of a Husband, By Ann Lisle

AND when he put his hand on her head as we were leaving, after he had gone into another room for a moment's secret [talk] with Nick, I enjoyed the [way] that she nestled against him lovingly.

"I am glad you [will] have again your car," she said [gently]. "It is just for you. Always when I see you to go by in it I like how you look—so fine and rich [illegible]."

"I'm not rich, Arlette," said the old man.

"You poor?" she asked.

"Poorer than poor," he whispered, his hand straying in her curls of soft copper with their misty lights.

"Why don't we have him to live by us?" demanded Arlette suddenly of Nicholas Perry.

"Dr. Willees he is your adopt papa. I think I [illegible] at all the little more works it make. Mr. Nicholas, you shall ask your pere to come live by us. I think that shall be nice?"

"How about it, Doc [illegible]—considering who asks?" Nick suggested, mockingly.

It was Bertie Lingard [illegible] into the room [illegible] the final odd twist to the [illegible] tion.

"Dr. Willis, have you ever considered taking a [illegible] fellow like me on as sort of general factotum and man of all work?" he asked.

"But you are an English lordship!" cried Arlette. "How [illegible] you play that by us you belong? It is a lord you are! How can he be man of all works? Here he must stay and wait until I get you well and strong [so] you can again go home—"

Dr. Willis broke across the scene with a quick: "You're enough to do here, Arlette. Lingard is solving my problem. I could afford a lot of things I need if I had him to help pay the way by taking care of a [illegible] for [illegible]."

"I [can] not let him go [illegible] Arlette [illegible]. You [illegible] doctor Willis [illegible] not take [illegible] Lingard [illegible]. Much [illegible]"

Dr. Willis' eyes intercepted mine. I did not need words to tell me what was in his heart. I knew how [illegible] was reminding him of little Bertie of the North woods and [illegible] the medical student she had [loved] too well. I knew he was wondering what would come of it if an English lord found the road to Arlette's heart.

"I need my own home, Arlette," said the doctor, quietly. "And Mr. Lingard needs the care I can give him now at close range. If you will stop and think you will see that your plan is not practical and that mine is wise."

"Oh, wise—wise!" she cried. "How is it that always what I want is not wise?"

Arlette turned and started to run from the doorway, where we had all gathered to say good-bye. [But] Bertie Lingard put out his hand and [laid] it on her arm. I saw her shrink and then turn with [a] [illegible] face to ask:

"You think I am bad—impudent to this nice old man, who come and spoil how I live?"

"I think Dr. Willis is quite right about me," said Lingard with quick intake of breath and momentary setting of the lips that made me wonder. "I shall go take up [illegible] with him in a day or so. And he and I will have a car every bit as good as the old one he's selling to Nick. A lot of things will get worked out, Arlette, if you will just realize that we men are older, more versed in the ways of the world and more practical than a little—nightingale who must learn to sing, but not to—keep household accounts."

There was a throbbing silence.

"Bertie Lingard is planning to pay for her musical education," shot across my mind. Well, he and the doctor must work that out together. But it's sad that Arlette suddenly regards the doctor as her enemy. Sad for him. That, too, must be left to work out."

And so they went away leaving cynical Nick, a pouting Arlette and a thoughtful Bertie. The doctor stayed only a minute or two at Zeke Schmidt's and then insisted on driving me home gallantly.

"I didn't know you could drive the car," I protested as my sweet old cavalier took the wheel at my doorstep.

"I'd do more than this to deliver you safe and sound to your husband," said the sweet old man.

I laughed as gaily as if I didn't know that Jim wouldn't be home until hours later. I laughed as if a jealous gnawing wasn't going on in my heart—while a bitter cynicism mocked me with the scornful repetition that Jim is in conference. And it was not until the doctor had driven away and I was alone, fumbling at the doorknob that a towering figure arose and came toward me out of the gloomy shadows at the far end of the porch. My heart almost stopped beating as I waited to see who my visitor might be—and whether he was as menacing as he looked.

HIGHER THAN WOOLWORTH BUILDING

The Yearly Sales of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

The Woolworth Building in New York City, which towers 792 feet above the street, is our highest building.

If all the bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound sold in one year could be placed end to end, they would make a column as high as the Woolworth Building with enough left over to extend from Lynn, Mass., to Cleveland, Ohio.

"I have lots of work to do and I am not very strong, but I was getting worse all the time until I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I used to lose my appetite completely at certain times, but I feel very well since I began taking this medicine. I think so much of it that I would go before a notary and swear to its merits. You could step into my home any time and you will find a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound." —MRS. FRANK M. CASEY, 220 South 11th Ave., Mount Vernon, N. Y.

MEDBURY SAYS---

By John P. Medbury

THIS is the time of the year when people who live in the country around certain eastern cities are making dandelion wine. Every front yard is a brewery.

THERE'S hardly a lawn that isn't breaking the 18th amendment.

A MAN can't cut his own grass without getting thirsty.

ONE guy had so many dandelions that he had to get the police to keep the bootleggers out of his back yard.

THEY were digging up his flower beds and putting them in flasks.

ONE woman says that her husband can't even water the lawn and come back in the house sober.

HE sits on the front stoop and waits for the dandelions to ferment.

A DANDELION is a yellow flower giving amber fluid that makes white men see pink and green.

THIS weed is intoxicating and I won't be long before the district attorneys will be putting padlocks on the back yards.

THE prohibitionists closed the saloons and the next thing they'll be shutting up the front lawns.

YOU smell the flowers and they'll smell your breath.

IT'LL be terrible when we have to get a prescription to gather a bunch of dandelions.

THE day may come when a man who spends a lot of time in his garden will be considered an inebriate.

HELL be liable for arrest for having a bunch of daisies in his hip pocket.

DAILY SHORT STORY

"FAMILY FINANCE"

By Louis Arthur Cunningham

"DAMN," said Mr. Lorringer suavely. "It's a mistake for women to be allowed money of their own . . . married women anyway. It makes them so deucedly cocky and independent. Really, I can think of nothing worse than an independent wife, unless it be several independent wives."

Mr. Lorringer, millionaire and still pleased with life, talked most entertainingly to himself. He spoke, of course, of Mrs. Lorringer, and informed the rich bindings on the library shelves and the sociable coals in the grate that he was a powerless husband simply because Mrs. Lorringer had money of her own.

"It is positively intolerable," sighed the millionaire to his cigar. "She just does as she pleases. She never consults me. If I remonstrate, she flings her own money in my face. Now what," he asked the copper fire-irons, "what is to be done?"

Before the irons could agree on a fitting reply for which Mr. Lorringer attentively watching them, waited, the library door opened abruptly and the rich Mrs. Lorringer entered.

"Guy! What are you sitting there mooning for? And talking to yourself! I'm going to buy that new Gallard-Eight phaeton this afternoon. Want to come along?"

"Do you want the check now, with which to pay for ten thousands worth of folly?" demanded Mr. Lorringer fiendishly.

"Check! I'll pay for it myself with my own money. I would not let you buy me a pair of garters, Guy Lorringer. You may have lots more money than I, my dear, but I have more than enough to keep me free from the slavery that financial dependence on a man must connote. And I will have more still. Just wait. I'm going to invest and I'll show you how even a brainless woman—your term, I believe—can manipulate money. I'm going to clean up."

"Hm, hm, hm," hmmed Mr. Lorringer. "Good by, dear. I'll attend to all the bills."

"I'll pay my own bills. I'm independent."

"Good God," sighed Mr. Lorringer to the bear-skin hearthrug after his independent spouse had bataken herself thence. "She exercises Scotch philanthropy with that money—all for herself; and makes me sweat with the knowledge, rubbed well in, that I do not support my wife. Now, it's a man's function and duty to support a wife whether she wants to be supported or not. And she is going to play the little up-and-downs, eh? Mm."

A week later Mrs. Lorringer had tired of the Gallard phaeton. She decided to buy stocks. But she did not go to her husband, a retired broker, for advice and sage guidance. Nay, nay. She was independent.

She looked at Guy with a moneyed stare. She was cleaning up on Tristata. She made twenty thousand on a small speculation and felt like one of the fellows who signed the Declaration of Independence, only more so. She was in the way to become a wealthier person than her husband.

Guy Lorringer hummed over all her activities, talked about them to his books, his fire-irons and hearthrug. He consulted the coal-scuttle and decided to do something unutterably low, nasty, and even unfair. Yet all's fair in love or war, and this was both; for he did love his wife, and her money made the war.

Guy knew that she walked among wolves when she played the market. He knew because he had himself been one of the wolves and still sharpened a mean and hungry tooth. Likewise he was aware that success is a potent wine with women. It goes to their head.

So he began to examine Mrs. Lorringer's activities. He learned again what he already knew . . . Mrs. Guy Lorringer was no man's fool. She was a wise woman and she was playing the game reckoningly but well. Still, you know, there are the wolves.

Mr. Lorringer carried his many millions in his hand, watching, waiting, licking his chops like the wolf. And cry err! The time had come. Mrs. Lorringer was putting all her money into Interboro's? She had far more Interboro's than her money could handle and was looking for more still. The Lupins tribe had advised her and it seemed so safe. Mr. Lorringer with a few old-friend wolves loped forth.

For days Interboros looked good. Then slump-slump. Some one was throwing them away right and left. They were selling them in fur millinery shops—everywhere. They hit the bottom before Mrs. Lorringer got from under.

Behold Mrs. Lorringer an independent wife without the means of being independent. She had more obligations than she could meet. Her brokers belonged to Mr. Lorringer's pack. She was a skinned lamb-kin. And the cunning of the wolf made it seem that the wolf knew nothing about the wool. But the wolf had it all . . . all her money was stacked beside her husband's. It was still in the family; but, as Mr. Lorringer confided to the bear's head on the hearthrug it was in the right hands.

Generously did Mr. Lorringer come to his wife's aid in her hour of unindependence; otherwise she might have been forced to sell a lot of things to pay wolves' commissions and provide money for repairs to Wall Street paving where her Interboro's had hit hardest. It was a grim debacle. For the first time Mr. Lorringer prevailed upon her to accept of his abundance And the sneak pretended it was his knowing all the while that he was just giving her back some of what he had taken.

Behold Mr. Lorringer a supreme husband. He sat among his library friends in triumph, smiling at the tongs, bowing to the bindings, caressing the bear with his toes. He was lord in his castle.

Mrs. Lorringer entered, sat down, looked dependent, crossed her pretty limbs.

Guy leaned forward.

"Mrs. Lorringer, you need a new pair of garters; here's a dollar." He put the money in her hand and walked out.

Scene—The Home
(Dinner Hour.)

MOTHER—I wonder why father isn't home. Sonny, call the office.
(Six-year-old boy goes to phone, takes a minute and returns.)

SONNY—They say he left the office an hour ago.

(Child calls jail and returns.)

SONNY—Dad's in jail. He said he meant to call you but got to shooting craps with some gentlemen friends. He wants me to run over to Mrs. Smith's and tell her Mr. Smith won't be home until Tuesday either.

MOTHER—Oh, dear—and I made Baba a Rum for dinner. Your father loves it, too.
(Mother goes to phone and calls up Jail, where she is connected with husband's cell.)

MOTHER—Hello, dearie. I'm sorry you won't be home to dinner. I made Baba a Rum . . . Did you have your jail clothes in the car? . . . I thought perhaps they were in the laundry this week . . . TODAY'S NEWS PICTURE

Exclusive news picture shows Miss Joyce Hawley, popular New York debutante, snapped as she was about to take the witness stand and describe her recent coming-out party staged by Mr. Earl Carroll. Miss Hawley blushingly admitted under cross-examination that she did not think to ask Mr. Carroll if he had a plumbing inspector's permit when he asked her to step into a bathtub partially filled with bevo. There was not a dry eye in the courtroom after Miss Hawley had told how she had been promised $1,000 to take a bath on a night other than Saturday, but had later been unable to make Mr. Carroll pay her so much as a compliment.

FOXY GRANDPA'S DAILY BEDTIME STORY

By Foxy Grandpa

WHEN I told the waiter in a restaurant where we were lunching that we would have cold boiled lobster with mayonnaise, Bobby's eyes lit up with delight, and he squirmed around in his chair impatiently until the waiter brought us each a beautiful big lobster split down the middle and spread on the platter.

Bobby took his little fork and commenced digging the pure white flesh out of the shell of the lobster and dipping each piece into the mayonnaise.

"Do you know," he said, "the nice thing about lobster is there are no bones in it, isn't it?"

"That's right," I said. "You see, instead of having a skeleton inside of his body, a lobster has his bones on the outside."

"Look at all of his legs, Foxy Grandpa!"

"Count them, Bobby," I suggested."

"Let me see," said Bobby, bending over his plate. "Here are five pairs of legs with joints in them—these right here next to his mouth."

SMART SAYINGS OF CLEVER CHILDREN

The Boston Evening American will pay $1 for published smart sayings. Address "Smart Sayings," Boston Evening American.

Dorothy had always lived in town and had never seen a chicken with its feathers on—her mother always bought "dressed" ones. Finally, on a drive in the country, her mother showed her some "live" ones. "Gee," she exclaimed, "they look lots better with their clothes on, don't they, mother?"

MISS ANNA WYMAN,
95 Essex St., E. Weymouth, Mass.

"Those help him to feed," I explained.

"Then look at these big claws, and then four pairs of long legs."

"They're for walking," I said.

"What are these pincers for, Foxy Grandpa—these big claws? They're not alike either."

"I'll tell you," I said. "That big knob-claw the lobster uses as a kind of an anchor to hold fast to a rock or seaweed so that he won't be tossed around by the waves. And that other claw with the sharp ridges like teeth he uses to seize his food and to cut and tear it up."

"He certainly could give you an awful pinch with it, couldn't he?" said Bobby, running his finger along the sharp teeth of the claw.

"Beautiful color, that red of the lobster, isn't it, Bobby?" I asked as I admired the flame color of the lobster's shell.

"I should think that other big fishes could see that bright red easily in the water and gobble the lobster up," suggested Bobby.

"Oh, that's not his natural color," I explained. "A lobster's kind of a greenish brown when he is alive. It's the boiling that turns their shell to bright red."

"Oh, I see," said Bobby, "I'd like to see one sometimes in the water."

That Summer we went up to the New England coast, and it was one of Bobby's chief delights to paddle along the beaches in sheltered coves.

One day, when I was sitting on the beach watching Bobby, wading in and out of the water, and picking up shells, he ran to me and said:

"Come here, Foxy Grandpa, here is a lobster as sure as you're alive! At first I could hardly see him because he just matched the water and the seaweed around him."

I got up and went down to the water's edge and sure enough, there was a fine big lobster, and in his claw he had a big piece of fish, and what do you think he did with it? He dug a hole in the sand in a very shallow part of the water, and buried his piece of fish!

"What do you think of that," exclaimed Bobby.

"He's not very hungry just now," I said, "and he's saving that for a future time."

Just then two other lobsters came along, and started to unearth the tasty bit which our lobster friend had just buried.

He flew at them furiously, and when they succeeded in digging it up, he grabbed it away from them and buried it again! Would you believe it, that lobster had to bury his fish five times before his comrades became discouraged and departed.

A WIFE'S MEDITATIONS

By Helen Rowland

A GOOD gift frame will outwear two or three marriage certificates these days.

• • •

If a woman can't get a strangle hold on a man's heart, his imagination or his conscience, she had just as well let go of his NECK.

• • •

You can always tell from their expression which man's wife has "gone to the country" and which has decided to "sacrifice herself" and stay at home with him, this Summer.

• • •

The girl who is saving her heart and kisses, until she can find a man who will offer her a life-long love nowadays, is practically "taking the veil."

• • •

Every modern girl pitches her wagon to a star-job or a star-career—but she wants a husband, too, if only as a nice safe parachute, in case the star should fail.

• • •

There are three fearful reasons why a bachelor is afraid to marry; the fear of being loved to death, worried to death or worked to death!

• • •

At sixteen, a girl's idea of a hero is one who looks like a haberdashery advertisement; later, it is one who looks like an advertisement for an imported car and an unlimited charge account.

• • •

Bachelors are the bootleggers of love; yet, here and there, a perfectly good husband has been made out of a bachelor, merely by "extracting the kick."

• • •

It would take all the joy out of a girl's life if she could know how quickly the hearts she has "broken" had sprung right back into shape again.

RHYMING OPTIMIST

By Aline Michaelis

I WONDER if you cherish the moments which are sweet, nor let their beauty perish because it was but fleet? Glad moments have been given as respite from the days when, tempest-torn and driven, we fought through weary ways. Glad moments rang with laughter, how swiftly it was spent! Yet, through long years thereafter its echoes bring content. There was a time of rapture, replete with joy and youth, and still the heart can capture its loveliness and truth. Though many days are cruel and touched with fear and blight, time sometimes sends a jewel, a moment wholly bright. There is no way to measure the height and depth of bliss, but happy hearts can treasure the bloom of smile and kiss. Glad moments are a dower to brighten darker years, ah, keep their beauty's flower untouched by time or tears!

FOR Sour Stomach PHILLIPS' Milk of Magnesia

Hereafter instead of soda take a little "Phillips Milk of Magnesia" in water any time for indigestion or sour, acid, gassy stomach, and relief will come instantly.

BETTER THAN SODA

For fifty years genuine "Phillips Milk of Magnesia" has been prescribed by physicians because it overcomes three times as much acid in the stomach as a saturated solution of bicarbonate of soda, leaving the stomach sweet and free from all gases. Besides, it neutralizes acid fermentation in the bowels and gently urges this souring waste from the system without purging. It is far more pleasant to take than soda.

Radio Queries

Q.—N. H. McH. I would like to know if you could tell me if there is a station WSM in Tennessee. I could not get his call letters very well, but heard him say "Tennessee" and also something about "National Light" about 2:30 A. M. Sunday.

A.—WSM is the station of the National Life and Accident Insurance Co., at Nashville, Tennessee.

Q.—J. R. H., Roxbury. I have a five tube DeWitt LaFrance set, of the Superadio type. Will you please tell me through your Radio Queries why it is that sometimes I get a humming noise and when I open the cabinet the noise will stop. Do you think this is a good set?

A.—Am afraid your question cannot be answered, as you have not told me enough about the hum. The character of the hum would have a great deal to do with discovering its origin, and the means for eliminating same. We have made tests on this receiver, and find it to be OK.

Q.—F. F., Ipswich. Some nights I can get WJZ very strong, and other nights he is barely audible. It has been my understanding that this station was a super-power one, using 50,000 watts, and should be easily received in these parts of the country. Can you give any reason for my inability to get consistent reception?

A.—The over-all range of the new WJZ station has been greatly increased through the use of superpower. It is a fact nevertheless, that in many sections, fans still encounter difficulties in hearing him.

RADIO SHOCK ABSORBERS PREVENT TUBE VIBRATION

Air cushions as shock absorbers for radio sets are among the most recent developments of radio engineers. They are supplied in sets of four and are made of a special grade of rubber securely vulcanized by a patented process and inflated without valves. It is claimed that the use of these cushions will eliminate vibrations, aid materially in undisturbed tuning, improve reception and reduce to a minimum microphonic noises. They insulate the set and prevent fine furniture from becoming scratched. They are quickly and easily installed and no fastening is required.

PAVE WAY FOR COP STRIKERS TO RETURN

An echo of the police strike in Boston seven years ago was heard in the City Council when Councillor McGrath of Dorchester introduced an order asking that Police Commissioner Wilson reinstate such men as want to return to duty.

McGrath's order was passed, but spirited opposititon to it was registered by Councillors Guild, Bush, Parkman and Arnold. In urging the passage of his order McGrath said: "After the police strike of seven years ago the present police department needs a new element to bolster it up.

"Since the strike 130 men have died. Fifty per cent. of the balance are in police business in other cities and towns and some are even chiefs. A recent canvas of the striking policemen made by the Boston Social Club reveals the fact that out of 1,170 who struck, only 242 men would return.

"The police department needs 300 men. Why not put these men to work as clerks and send the younger men out on the streets. If a man commits murder in this State, he is likely to be pardoned at some time.

"These men who made but one mistake are never pardoned. They could lend stability to the present force, which at the present time is so sorely lacking."

COAL SHORTAGE HITS BRITISH PLEASURE BOATS

London, June 8 (A.P.).—The necessity for conserving coal because of the miners' strike brought another restrictive order from the government today, which prohibits the use of coal by pleasure steamers unless a permit is obtained. Public ferryboats are exempted.

Continuing Shows

WILBUR—"The Green Hat." Gripping story of a girl who paid a high price for doubtful love affairs.

PLYMOUTH—"Merry Merry." Musical comedy for all kinds of people. Naturally it is crowded with dancing.

GAYETY — "Rarin' To Go." Ed Daley's fast moving amusement affair in black and white. The last week.

COPLEY—Mary Young in "Dancing Mothers." Showing that matronly ladies are not always desperately slow.

pulpit. "The people of New York want their religion with a jazz temple," he says, and he doesn't intend to shoot off fireworks or wear a red vest to save men's souls.

Mr. Van Dyke's complaint is just. When you have bare-footed young ladies dancing in the church aisles to "express religion," you push competition far. But pulpit sensationalism is not new. It was old when in Brooklyn Dewitt Talmage raced up and down his long platform, or Henry Ward Beecher sold a good looking mulatto slave girl at public auction in his pulpit.

WETS AND DRYS will watch the prohibition split in New York's Republican party this Fall. Franklin W. Christman, extra dry, has been selected to run for the Senate against Senator Wadsworth, who is frankly wet and means to be reelected. This is to be the national test of prohibition's power in the East.

NEW YORK CITY is trying to clean up indecent theatrical exhibitions. The results will be slight. Indecent plays, like smallpox sores, come from within. The trouble is not with theatres and their managers, but with the public. The theatre, like the newspaper, is a mirror. Look into it and you see the people.

OUR YOUNG LADIES are becoming sophisticated, almost cold. A young gentleman in love with Miss Clara Bow, who did not care much for him, slashed his wrists with a razor. Her comment was, "Gentlemen usually prefer guns, when they commit suicide for love."

PROFESSOR MOSCICKI, new President of Poland, sends friendly greetings to the American nation, calm amid serious disturbances at home. In Eastern Galicia, Polish troops are used to hold down rebellious Ukrainians. Various places are in a state of siege. Communist agitators are arrested, newspapers temporarily suppressed.

GREAT INDIGNATION in the Argentine because of Sacco and Vanzetti's sentence to death. Taxi drivers of Buenos Aires announce that they will go on strike if the men are executed.

To make innocent Argentinians walk because cold-blooded New Englanders insist on executing two men convicted of murder seems unreasonable, regardless of the condemned men's guilt.

FREE PASSAGE IS ASKED FOR ALIEN VETS

By JOHN A. KENNEDY.
Universal Service Correspondent.

Washington, June 8.—Determined to grant "the fullest measure of justice" to alien veterans of Uncle Sam's Army, Representative John Q. Tilson, Republican floor leader of the House, introduced a resolution to permit their return to this country at cost on Shipping Board vessels.

Senator James W. Wadsworth, Jr., of New York, introduced a resolution in the Senate.

This action follows the aggressive steps taken by Congress and President Coolidge in altering the immigration laws to allow the soldiers and their families to come back to America as non-quota immigrants. The legislation was sponsored by the Hearst newspapers.

THOUSANDS DETAINED.

Several thousand of these soldiers —many of them carrying battle scars as evidence of their loyalty to the United States—have been detained in Europe for years because of immigration law bars.

Under the resolution sponsored by Mr. Tilson, the Shipping Board is authorized to bring them and their families in government ships, charging only for food. The program has the hearty support of Chairman T. V. O'Connor of the Shipping Board, with whom Representative Tilson conferred before introducing his resolution.

The House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold a hearing on the Tilson bill Thursday.

JUSTICE IN MEASURE.

"It is only a decent thing to do," Mr. Tilson said in urging the justice of his measure. "These men displayed the kind of stuff they were made of when they volunteered to fight for America. Aliens did not have to serve in our army. That is all the more reason why we should want those who did serve to come back to us now."

Do a lot of people buy imported goods because of their quality or because of their label?

Are American merchants partly or largely to blame for the glamour which has been trown around foreign merchandise?

Has not the time come to take action helpful to this country?

A nationwide movement has been launched in Britain to induce the people to buy home-made goods. The government now stamps on each letter going through the mail a postmark carrying the slogan: "British-made goods are better."

The latest issue of a well-known British business magazine leads off with an article beginning: "There's a rule for us for the next five years at least—buy British and sell to the world. We must increase our exports and decrease our imports, or we're done."

Elsewhere it says: "Every liner that goes to America carries millions of British money, and very little of this money comes back. We are importing foreign manufactured goods at the rate of $5,000,000 a day. We send more than $1,500,000,000 a year out of Great Britain for goods that we can make ourselves."

American imports lately have been outbalancing exports. Letters have been given recently in this column discussing the relative merits of foreign and domestic goods. Complaints have been registered that too many American manufacturers emphasize only low prices and say little or nothing about quality, thus helping to keep alive the widespread notion that everything foreign is superior to anything American.

Some day I may write a column on a change that I think I can see on the horizon in the buying habits of rich and well-to-do Americans, a change beneficial to this country.

Pressed Steel Car Company is one of the largest producers in the United States of passenger and freight railroad cars, street cars, pressed steel trucks and other transportation apparatus.

During the ten years ending in 1924 net profits were equal to an annual average of over 9 per cent. on the common stock.

The 1925 earnings, however, made a poor showing as compared with 1924 and 1923 with the result that there have been no dividends on the common stock since June, 1924.

Preferred dividends, however, are being paid.

The present financial condition of the company is fairly satisfactory since current assets are about four times as great as current liabilities and since there are no bank loans and only a small amount of funded debt.

During the present year the company has been undergoing a recapitalization process under which the Western Steel Car and Foundry Company, formerly a subsidiary, has been merged into the Pressed Steel Car Company.

As a result, new preferred and common stock has been issued.

The principal reason for the merger was that it would result in more economical operations.

INFORMATION IS RIGHT OF BUYERS

By FRANK H. MELOON
Financial Editor.

Fact is coming to be more and more generally recognized that buyers of stock are entitled not only to general information concerning it, but also, at frequent intervals, to truthful reports regarding the condition of the companies of which they are part owners. President E. H. H. Simmons, of the New York Stock Exchange, recognizes this right when he requests corporations whose securities are listed on the New York Stock Exchange, but do not issue regular quarterly earnings statements, to make public the figures whenever possible.

E. H. H. Simmons

S. T. Hubbard, Jr.

Albert Greene Duncan has been elected a vice-president of the insurance corporation of John Paulding Mead Company.

• • •

"It is said that Livermore has been selling rubber and tire stocks and that he and his following are now pretty well loced in," says the Boston News Bureau. When they "lock up" Livermore, I expect to see old-fashioned handcuffs hold Houdini.

• • •

In asking co-operation, Mr. Simmons says that for years past the Exchange has exerted its influence in this direction in sympathy with the growing demand for greater and more frequent publicity in regard to the affairs of corporations listed on its board and has met with ready response in many quarters.

• • •

One obvious way to clarify the situation is to refuse listings in the future to such companies as will not agree to make statements at designated intervals or at the call of the Board of Governors.

• • •

London special says confession of President Simmons that he works 14 hours a day intrigues London press, which names him "busiest man in the world." Mr. Simmons said: "I have come to London for a holiday, but when you come to greatest international financial center of the world, which London certainly is, you are naturally tempted to study methods here. We have a lot of financial problems in New York. They have arisen out of the war, and our position in international affairs. I feel that in facing them we can learn a lot from the way Britain has solved nd is solving her post-war problem."

Dry "Honorariums"

How They May Be Prejudicial to the Public Good

The ringmaster of the Anti-Saloon League admits and boasts of the practice of employing members of the Congress to make speeches for prohibition here and there.

Once the Standard Oil Company passed money to Congressmen for services not so specific, but it did not parade the fact. Indeed, it became quite peeved when Mr. Hearst exposed it.

Taken at large, the public morals of public life in this country are probably improving, notwithstanding occasional disclosures which point to the contrary. Those who are best acquainted with Congressional standards over a long span of time concur in this view, and the country is inclined to accept it.

But it is clear that the practice admitted by Wayne B. Wheeler is liable to abuse.

It is possible for a judge to take a fee from a litigant and yet remain judicial, but long ago civilized opinion frowned on the custom as not conducive to justice.

The maker of law should be as free of malign influence as the interpreter of law, for both are supposed to be incorruptible and unbiased in their service of the public.

We are still some way from holding the legislator to as rigid a standard of impartiality as we hold the judge, yet the best thought favors progress in that direction.

Only recently a New York Representative, Meyer Jacobstein, was applauded in the House for saying: "There is no such thing as a Republican fact or a Democratic fact." By which he meant that the right approach to legislation was not through bias, but through the scientific method of fitting laws to needs.

"Of course," says Mr. Wheeler, "the Anti-Saloon League never paid any Congressman for introducing or championing a bill. Occasionally, when a Congressman makes a speech for prohibition, his expenses, and sometimes an honorarium, are paid by the organization that arranged for it."

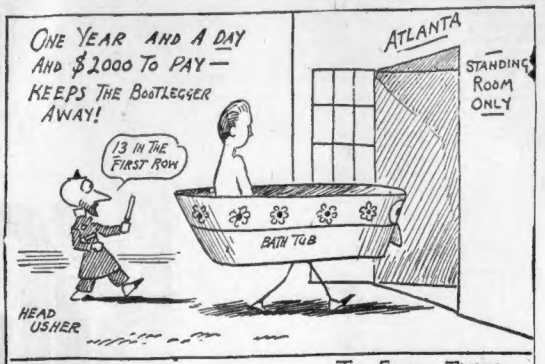
Distribution of such honoraria, when disclosed, makes difficult the public's determination of how far the Congressman's attitude may be influenced by expectation of further fees, for the greatest of teachers has said that "where your treasure is, there will your heart be also."

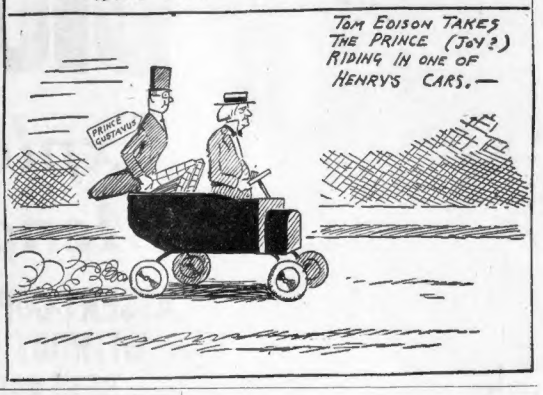
And when not disclosed, such a method of bidding for political favor has immeasurable possibilities of menace and harm.

The practice at best is tolerable only if tempered by full publicity. No honest Congressman can object to publicity. Not many members would have the hardihood to vote to deny it were a bill to require it brought, as it should be, to a record vote.

Something New at the Zoo

By E. T. Powers





As Good as a Man

Yes, Better Than Many

THIS PICTURE OF A THOROUGHBRED HORSE, JACK HORNER, IS WELL NAMED, "PORTRAIT OF A GENTLEMAN."

We are taught that all human beings if they behave may go to heaven and be perfect angels forever.

This four-legged animal, created by the same Power that created us, dies, goes into the ground, and that is all.

The most horrible criminal, if he truly repents, can be saved and live in immortal happiness. The lowest savage, who spends his life eating putrid meat, mistreating his miserable wives and killing his fellow savages, may go to heaven if saved by missionaries.

But for this noble creature, complete annihilation.

Yet compare him with the average man. He does his best, EVERY TIME. He is honest, faithful, ambitious, ALWAYS.

There is in him no treachery, no cruelty. He will go until he drops dead. No sound of complaint escapes him.

And to the utmost of his ability he HONORS HIS FATHER AND HIS MOTHER, making the utmost of his strength and other qualities that they have handed down to him.

But he must go back into the earth, to be eternally forgotten and GONE, while the vilest murderer, the meanest savage, the microcephalic idiot may go on, brilliant, radiant, happy through all eternity.

It is true that the human soul is immortal. We KNOW it. It must seem hard to the good thoroughbred horses that no arrangement has been made to give them another chance.

Perhaps the LIFE that is in them lives on, although THEY do not, and goes on living eternally in other good horses or other good animals.

That would be some satisfaction.

ART SHOULD APPLY TO WHOLE CITY

By DR. FRANK CRANE

MR. A. MULLER-URY, regarded by many as America's foremost portrait painter, has just set up a studio near Huntington's settlement in California.

The other day he gave vent to some views upon art which perhaps are quite widely held. He said that while he was in Los Angeles on a visit they were talking of building a ten-million-dollar museum. He said it would be better to build a million-dollar museum and spend the rest on acquiring things to put in it. He also said that it was the habit of people to make beautiful homes and not fill them with objects of art, such as paintings, engravings, sculpture, and so forth.

Mr. Muller-Ury takes the traditional and conventional view of what art is. It is supposed to consist of beautiful things in the homes and on the walls for people to admire.

Art is a broader term. It should apply primarily to the whole city. More artistic taste would be displayed by building a beautiful city than by building a city of homes with beautiful things in them. It is better to have a city all constructed on a unified artistic plan than to have the miscellaneous jumbles of slums and millionaire palaces that now constitute a city.

Art is something that must be public in its nature. It must represent a widespread feeling for beauty among the people.

Art is essentially democratic. It is not a thing to be patronized by kings and nobility and to be admired by only the elect few, but it is a thing with which to appeal to the people and for which there is a response among the people. There is a distinct connection between ugly backyards full of tin cans and rubbish, and bad citizens.

Art may be recognized as a distinct thing to elevate and purify the people. It should be taught in our common schools and it should be exemplified in our communal life. It does not consist of things gathered in a museum which only a few people go to see, but consists of the whole city which nobody can help seeing.

RISKING OTHER LIVES IN DRIVING YOUR CAR

When you have friends in your automobile do you take any foolhardy chances in order to display your fearlessness? Do you flaunt your ability to extricate yourself from hazardous predicaments?

You like to "step on 'er" to show the speed of your car; you drive fast up to the point when you must put on the brakes in order to show how quickly you can stop and how sure you are in handling an emergency.

You may think that appeals to your friends, but it does not.

Even the man who owns a car feels uneasy with the driver who takes chances.

His opinion is that if he had hold of the wheel he would experience a feeling of safety which he does not feel while you are driving.

Are you a man in size, but still a boy waiting to "show off?"

No sensible man has any use for the one who deliberately jeopardizes the lives of himself and companions merely to gratify his own vanity.

The more sanely and carefully you drive when you have guests or the members of your own family the more they will respect your good judgment and your self-mastery.

LISTEN, WORLD!

By ELSIE ROBINSON

HE was an old man and afraid to die.

I do not know whether you will care to discuss such a gloomy subject in your column," he says. "I suppose your work is mostly for young people. And yet we old people need help so much more than young people do. They have all the world before them, but our sight has narrowed down to death, and we are wondering how we can bear it. It is terrible to think of stopping after a full life. I am still so interested in everything, yet I know I must shortly give it up. Have you any word of comfort for us?"

Afraid to die.

But you have died a thousand times, and lived again, my friend. No, I do not refer to previous lives. You have died a thousand times in THIS life, and lived again.

What is death?

It is not the mere dissolution of the body. Surely you are not wracked with pain when you cut off a toe nail. Life was not veiled with darkness when you became bald. Nor do you shrink with horror from your daily shave. You view with philosophy such loss of various parts of your body. And you feel no great fondness for the wrinkled, aceey remnant which remains. You'd gladly be rid of the whole thing if you were sure that YOU went on.

Eternal Changes

So it isn't your body—it's the CONSCIOUSNESS that resides in that body that you cherish. You turn in terror from the thought that the CONSCIOUSNESS should change or cease or go to parts unknown.

But it HAS changed and ceased and gone to parts unknown a thousand times in your life.

Every time you have changed your viewpoint or your attitude toward life that consciousness has changed and ceased and gone to parts unknown.

You are an old man now. The world has changed greatly since you were a boy and you have changed with it. You have discarded beliefs which were the very foundation of your life as a boy and a man. You have lost your interest in various pursuits and pleasures which once formed your whole horizon. You have adopted new views which once you sneered at.

Wisdom has replaced ignorance in your life. Tolerance has replaced harshness. Humility has replaced arrogance. Philosophy has replaced peevishness. You are not completely made over, but you are, in most respects, an entirely different person than you were ten, twenty, forty years ago. You are a different person than you were yesterday. You cannot live at all without changing—without dropping part of yourself and taking on some new part.

Whole Body Changes

This is just as true of your body, as it is of your mind. Your [illegible] body changes in the course of seven years. Not a particle of you remains which lived at twenty-one. You are seventy-one now. YOU HAVE DIED AND BEEN BORN SEVENTY TIMES ALREADY. Ten times has your body passed from the eyes of those who loved you and now a trace of it remains. And every time you have slept your consciousness has gone into a void where no earthly mind can follow.

YOU CANNOT LIVE AT ALL WITHOUT DYING.

You never thought of it in that way before, did you?

You have always thought of death as a definite, black gulf which lay across your path somewhere in the inevitable march. You would have to go down into the gulf and no one would ever see you again.

But death is not a definite black gulf which awaits you.

Death is a transition through which you are constantly passing.

And that day when men shall announce you dead will be no more remarkable, no more mysterious or devastating than all the other days.

It will simply be a day on which you shall drop a load which has become too heavy.

'You Said It, Marceline!'

By MARCELINE D'ALROY

ON "COUNTERFEIT LOVE"

WHEN SOME PEOPLE have LOVED MANY TIMES
They become RECONCILED
To things that those Who have LOVED ONCE,
Or NOT AT ALL,
CANNOT TOLERATE.
LOVE without the thought
OF PERMANENCE
Should never be dignified
By the name of LOVE.
When A MAN can think
He could LOVE A GIRL
For about SIX MONTHS
Easily, he is ATTRACTED

Merely. When A GIRL
Can say she could be
HAPPILY MARRIED TO a man
For only a COUPLE OF Years, she is in love, maybe,
But she does NOT LOVE
TO BEGIN an affair when
One can see THE END before
One STARTS IS to court
DISASTER.
True love can see NO END.
It feels LIFE ITSELF
Will be TOO SHORT
A time in which to Demonstrate its DEVOTION.

NATURE PROVES A GREAT TEACHER

By Garrett P. Serviss,
Noted Astronomer and Writer on Scientific Topics of Popular Interest.

ONE of the greatest kindnesses that any one can offer to his fellow beings, it seems to me, is the inducement to seek knowledge, amusement and the secret of happiness in unaffected nature. I read now and then an outgiving from some enchanted city dweller (such as I was once) disparaging country life and country people in general.

And then I thank my guardian angels that my life opened in the country, and was led there long enough, before the great city fascinated its grip upon me, to enable me to get such a full draught of nature's beverage that the taste of it and the longing for it have never been permanently lessened.

When I read of city children being sent away to dwell for Summer months on farms and among hills and forests and streams, under unpolluted skies, where there are a dozen kinds of berry fields and hedges, and moss-grown boulders, and singing rills bordered with moist grass and native violets, and ravines with wild honeysuckles clinging high in the crevices of their rocky sides, where there are shining fish darting over the bright pebbly bottoms of every brook, and thousands of gold-yellow butterflies encamped around rain puddles in the road, and rising and circling in dazzling masses when alarmed; and companies of cawing crows spying out unprotected cornfields; and cattle and sheep AND HORSES.

In the Twilight

And when the twilight is at hand, perchance the angelic voice of a hermit thrush singing its evening hymn in a neighboring woodland, purer and more thrilling than any prima donna's richest tones, and when the twilight ends the incredible carousal of the fireflies, and after that the ineffable splendor of the starry heavens, such as no city dweller ever dreamt of—I say that when I hear of city children going to weeks or months of such joys, I think:

"God bless them, and open their minds and hearts with their eyes."

And then I wish to become again a child in the country. And I can do it, when I get the time. I know, for I have done it; at least I have almost done it. I have gone back to the old place in the Mohawk country, close by the brawling Schoharie, and, shutting my eyes to all the man-made or man-bought changes, have laid me down on a gray and pink boulder, polished by centuries of freshets, at the edge of the pebbly tank of the Irish Creek, and, dipping through a few inches of crystal water, have filled my hand with little colored water worn pebbles as big as peas and as marbles, and, lost in admiration of their dripping beauty of variegated hues, have felt as if they were a handful of priceless gems, almost as I had felt many a time when a boy. The old charm came back again and the old wild freedom of the imagination, unhampered by technical knowledge. There was only a certain dinness from the intervening years of worldly wisdom.

Not Troubled

And I went on, wandering again on boyish feet over the flat, smooth black slate rock bedding, a shaded reach of the creek, and threw me down where the leaf-shadows flickered in the old, well-remembered way on sunshine patches, while tiny minnows darted in the two-inch pools of glass-clear water, and there once more I pounded out "iron buttons" whose hiding places in the fine-grained slate were betrayed by round swellings and yellow stains on the cleavage planes of the rock. And I cracked open some of the buttons, as I had used to do, in order to admire the metallic lustre of the fresh-broken core.

In the essentials of life it has not helped me much to have learned that the substance of these curious buttons is no kind of gold, not even "fool's gold," but only iron disulphide in the form called pyrite.

My boyish mind was not troubled over the question whether the buttons were gold or brass or what not; it was enough that they were beautiful, hard to find and hard to crack, and mysterious in their nature.

Sometimes children taken into the country are stuffed with too much adult "information" about things. It disgusts them, or turns them into premature prigs. Leave them alone with nature and their imagination. They will learn the things they need to know fast enough.

In my experiment at renewing boyhood's impressions of nature which included a hundred things I have not mentioned, I did not feel that I was losing my mind in putting off any knowledge, but rather that I was finding it again. I seemed to be washing it of some of its dross.
